SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District is located on the east side of the City of Richmond. The Southern Railway tracks and East Broad Street define the southern boundary. North 30th and 32nd streets, Melton Avenue and the western edge of Oakwood Cemetery, roughly demarcate the western boundary. Nine Mile Road and the corporation line for the City of Richmond form the northern boundary. The city line, North 39th Street, Crestview Road and the eastern edge of Chimborazo Park establish the eastern limits of the district. Chimborazo Park and Oakwood and Evergreen cemeteries solidify the southern and northern edges of the district with open green space. The linear district encompasses three neighborhoods--Chimborazo, Oakwood, and Glenwood Park. The grid pattern of the streets, mature trees, concrete sidewalks, and asphalt street paving blocks unify the three communities. The neighborhoods of Oakwood and Chimborazo have merged over the years but Glenwood Park still retains its distinctive character due in part to its park-like setting and curvilinear streets. The predominately residential area contains a significant collection of late nineteenth and early-twentieth-century, brick and frame dwellings that display an eclectic mixture of Late Victorian, Queen Anne and Colonial Revival styles. The district also contains examples of Victorian cottages and bungalow-style dwellings. School buildings, churches and corner stores add to the visual interest of the area. There are six sites, five objects, six structures, 1,606 buildings, and one previously listed school within the historic district. The six sites include three contributing cemeteries and three parks. Two of the parks are noncontributing. The buildings are composed of 1,079 primary resources (dwellings, churches, schools and stores) and 528 secondary resources (garages and sheds). There are sixty-seven noncontributing primary resources and 255 noncontributing secondary resources. With the passing of the years, some of the buildings have deteriorated or have been modified. Despite these changes, the district still possesses a high level of integrity and architectural interest.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION

The district follows the grid of square blocks and wide streets found in the older sections of the city until it reaches the intersection of Oakwood Avenue and P Street where the grid bends to the northeast creating irregularly shaped blocks. Oakwood Avenue or the East Richmond Road as it was called, was an early thoroughfare leading out of the city to the east. Running across the northern end of the district, it was an extension of Venable and Q streets to the west and connected to the road to Williamsburg. During its earliest history, the district was largely undeveloped with a few scattered farms and homesteads. It was not until the latter part of the nineteenth century that lots were subdivided, sold, and concentrated development began to take place. The earliest development was concentrated along Broad Street and Oakwood Avenue, following the trolley lines that were in operation by 1897. Two major periods of development have been identified--1907 to 1913 and 1923 to 1926. Glenwood Park, subdivided in 1927, was one of the last sizeable developments in the area.

The infilling of vacant lots and the development of smaller tracts at the edges of the district has been the hallmark of post World War II development in the neighborhoods.

Early National and the Antebellum Periods (1789 –1860)

Until the mid-nineteenth century, Richard Adams and his heirs owned much of the land now contained in the Oakwood-Chimborazo historic district. A plat for the disposition of Adams' land, made after his death in 1821, showed that the property had been laid out in a pattern of square blocks found elsewhere in the city.[1] The plat also indicated that Thomas Rutherfoord had substantial holdings south of Broad Street and northwest of 31st and N streets and James Malone owned a substantial tract north of Leigh Street and east of 34th and several scattered blocks. George Winston and Samuel Pleasants were also owners of numerous blocks. Pleasants also owned a large tract of land west of 34th street and south of Leigh, which was owned by his heirs until 1924 when it was later subdivided as part of the Glenwood Park development. Because single owners held much of the land in larger tracts until the mid-nineteenth century, early development was sparse and scattered. Before 1787, Richard Adams sold several blocks near the southeast corner of 32nd and Leigh streets to George Winston, whose brickyard lay to the west.[2] Winston's house, known as "Cedar Grove" or "Cedar Hill" was typical of the early homesteads found throughout the area in the early nineteenth century. It was a "large well constructed dwelling with a laundry, kitchen, dairy, two-story brick office, coach house, barn, stable and ice house."[3] In 1809, the house and surrounding property was sold to Samuel Pleasants. The house, demolished around 1900, was still owned by Samuel Pleasants' sons as late as 1885. Around 1800, James Yarbrough built a similar house nearby at the corner of North 32nd and East Clay streets. Sometime before 1819, George Blakey built a substantial frame house near the corner of 36th and P streets on his 200-acre farm and Philip Haley built a striking two-story brick dwelling in the 800 block of North 32nd Street.

All of these pre-1819 houses have been demolished, leaving the Malone and Larus houses built in 1843 and 1854, respectively, and the double house at 621-623 North 30th Street as the oldest extant house in the district. The Malone House located at 3213-3215 N Street is a 2-1/2-story, Greek Revival-style brick dwelling. The building has a side gable roof with a stepped parapet. There are two chimneys in each of the parapet ends. A large central pediment has been added above the front entry that is flanked by two original gable front dormers. A Late Victorian cornice with a plain panel frieze and sawn brackets has also been added to the house and the porch has been altered. The dwelling was so substantial that it was divided into two residences. In 1854, Pleasant C. Larus demolished the residence of his father-in-law, James Yarbrough, to build himself a new dwelling. The Larus house, 425 North 32nd Street, is also a two-story, Greek Revival-style brick dwelling with a center hall plan. The house and porch retain their box cornices and dentiled friezes. The two-story, brick, Greek Revival-style double house at 621-623 North 30th Street was built around 1860. It has a two-course corbelled brick cornice below the standing-seam-metal side gabled roof. The windows have decorative wood lintels. The two entrances to the dwellings are recessed with three wooden steps in entryways that lead to the single-leaf paneled front doors with transoms. In 1854, Richmond acquired land in Henrico County to establish a municipal cemetery to serve the eastern quarter of the city. The new cemetery was named Oakwood for the abundance of oak trees that grew there.

Civil War (1861-1860)

During the Civil War period, there was no new development in the neighborhood with the exception of Chimborazo Hospital and Star Fort Number 4. The hospital was established on a bluff overlooking Bloody Run just outside the city in Henrico County. Chimborazo Park now occupies the site. Star Fort Number 4 was a part of the inner line of defenses that surrounded the city from the James River on the west to the James River on the east. It was located at the end of P Street near its present intersection with North 34 Street.

Reconstruction and Growth (1865-1917)

The City of Richmond annexed the portion of the district south of Marshall Street in 1867 and the remainder of the district was annexed in 1906, which corresponds with a period of steady growth between 1907 and 1913. Even so, the area was slow to develop because the bulk of the land was owned by a few families and was not platted into city blocks until the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Further, blocks became available in a haphazard manner and when sold were often purchased by a single speculative developer. While houses in the Italianate, Late Victorian, Queen Anne and Colonial Revival styles are represented, the predominate architectural form is an eclectic blending of styles - an Italianate porch, Colonial Revival doorway and detailing and a Queen Anne gable.

John T. J. Melton, a prolific builder in the district, built a house at 314 North 32nd Street in 1907 for R. S. Jenkins and another at 316 North 32nd Street in 1908 for Sarah J. Clarke. Both of these dwellings typify the eclectic mixture of styles that is seen throughout the neighborhood. The frame dwelling at 314 has a box cornice with large corner brackets. The false mansard roof has a pedimented dormer with a round-arched, multi-paned window. On the left side of the façade, there is a shallow two-story projecting bay, with tripartite windows on both stories, topped by a large pediment with decorative slate shingles and a clover-leaf-shaped vent. The hipped roof porch has a projecting pediment at the entry bay and a box cornice with a modillioned and dentiled frieze. A starburst pattern is found in the porch pediment. The other, 316 North 32nd Street, is a brick dwelling with a two-story, three-sided projecting bay with a conical roof on the left side of the façade. There is a polychromed-slate-shingled false mansard roof with a hipped-roof dormer in the right bay, adjacent to the projecting bay. The building has a box cornice with a modillioned frieze and large corner brackets. A round arch frames the recessed entry. The hipped-roof porch has a box cornice, dentiled frieze, Tuscan columns on wooden paneled piers, and a turned balustrade. Other houses by John T. J. Melton that exemplify this mixing of styles can be found at 508-518 North 33rd Street, and 526-528 North 33rd Street. Other examples by various architects and builders can be observed at 414-416, 419 and 520 North 32nd Street, and 306-308, 307-309, 520-522 North 33rd Street. The houses built by Robert H. Walton for Thomas F. Boyle, one of the larger developers in the area, at 3510-3516 and 3509-3515 E. Clay Street, in 1909, are outstanding examples of eclectic frame dwellings. A grouping of early apartment buildings in the 600 block of North 32nd Street, built in 1907 by the Fulton Brick Works posses a combination of Queen Anne and Colonial Revival elements. The buildings have false mansard roofs with solider-course stringcourses below the attic level, and box cornices with brackets that run above the solider course. There are end towers with decorative brickwork. The windows have corbeled sills and solider-course jack arches.

The grand houses on Broad Street fronting Chimborazo Park take this blending of styles to an even higher level of articulation than the more modest houses found in the northern parts of the district. Two excellent examples are the dwellings built in 1910 by H. E. Mills for Ida Peek Randlett at 3504 and 3506 East Broad Street. Both houses combine Queen Anne and Classical Revival elements. The dwelling at 3504 has an “iron-spot” brick façade and common brick sides. The right side of the façade has a shallow, rectangular projecting bay on the first floor with triple windows and a three-sided projecting bay on the second floor with a slate shingle conical roof. The entrance to the building is a single-leaf wood door with an oval beveled light with carved lion’s heads at the corners and a stained-glass transom. There are ashlar granite sills and lintels at all have the window and door openings. The front porch has Scamozzi columns, engaged Scamozzi columns at the house, turned balusters, and a dentiled cornice. There is a slate shingle false mansard roof and a stepped parapet at the edge and a dentiled cornice. The second house, 3506, has a three sided projecting bay with a steeply pointed conical slate roof. The one-story, two-bay, front porch has a tile deck and brick steps. There are concrete steps leading to the basement entrance and well under the porch. Corinthian columns set on brick piers with rusticated caps, a picketed balustrade, and a dentiled cornice are present on the front porch. At the entrance is a single-leaf wood door that is paneled with a single light, a transom, one sidelight, a rusticated lintel, and an ashlar sill. All of the windows have rusticated lintels and sills and there are paired windows over the entry bay. There is a false mansard roof with hexagonal slate shingles and a parapet and shed roof to the rear.

The Italianate-style dwellings are among the oldest frame houses in the neighborhood and display the characteristic features of decorative cornices and porches and elongated windows on the first story. The residence at 617 North 30th Street is illustrative of the style as executed in the Oakwood-Chimborazo district. It is two-story, three-bay frame dwelling with a bracketed and dentiled cornice with a plain panel frieze. It has a one-story, three-bay elaborate front porch with turned posts, sawn brackets, star-motif fan brackets, and a picketed balustrade. The house at 3612 East Broad Street has a hipped roof, which is atypical. Shed roofs are more commonly associated with the style in Richmond neighborhoods. Many of the Italianate houses are double house as seen in the grouping at 622-628 North 30th Street. Other examples may be observed at 3015 M Street, 617 North 30th Street, the 500 and 600 blocks of North 31st Street, and the 500 and 900 blocks of North 32nd Street.

The Late Victorian dwellings in the neighborhood are typically two stories in height with elaborate cornices and decorative porches. Representative of these houses is 3206 East Broad Street with its shed roof, bracketed and dentiled cornice with sawn frieze panels, and hipped-roof porch with bracketed turned posts, a spindle frieze, and a picket balustrade. Some of the Late Victorian houses have false mansard roofs and projecting bays like 3302, 3308, 3312 East Broad Street. Excellent examples in brick are found at 3315-3321 East Marshall Street with their elaborate wooden cornices with sawn brackets, dentils, paneled friezes, and pierced frieze vents. They have full-length windows on the front façade with segmental arch lintels, corbelled brick, and wood sills. The porches have hipped roofs, dentiled cornices and turned posts. Other good examples of Late Victorian dwellings in wood and brick are located at 411, 511-523 North 31st Street; the 300, 400 and 500 blocks of North 33rd Street; 1117, 1506-1508 North 35th Street; 1208 North 36th Street. As well as in the 3600 block of East Broad Street; the 3400 blocks of East Marshall and East Clay streets; the 300, 400 and 500 blocks of Chimborazo Boulevard; the 3400 blocks of S and R streets; and 1014-1018, 1312-1314 Oakwood Avenue.

Examples of Colonial Revival style architecture can be seen in the 300 block of North 32nd Street, the west side of the 500 block of North 33rd Street, the east side of the 600 block of Chimborazo Boulevard and the west side of the 700 block of Chimborazo Boulevard. Typical of the Colonial Revival style houses found in the neighborhood are the brick dwellings in the 500 block of North 30th Street with their false mansard roofs, elliptical-arched door and window heads and columned porches. Richmond architect D. Wiley Anderson designed the group of houses at 518-526 North 30th Street in 1910. C. W. Nicholson designed a similar grouping of houses at 519-523 North 30th Street in 1911. Architect, Isaac W. Throckmorton designed two, frame Colonial Revival dwellings at 503 North 31st Street and 501 North 32nd Street built in 1910 and 1911, respectively. The house at 503 features a full porch with a box cornice and tapered Doric posts on brick piers. The house at 501 has a hipped roof that is atypical in the district. Other good examples of Colonial Revival architecture can be seen at 3501 East Clay Street, and 3407-3409 East Marshall Street.

Of high architectural interest are several Late Victorian/Queen Anne cottages scattered throughout the district. They are 1 to 1 ½ stories in height with a variety of rooflines and ornamentation–no two are alike. The two earliest, built ca. 1890, are 1205 and 1219 Oakwood Avenue. Number 1205 has a cross-gable roof with a projecting front gable. The front pedimented gable has decorative shingles and a box cornice. The full facade porch has delicate Tuscan columns, a turned balustrade and a box cornice. The roof of the porch forms the base of the front pediment. The dwelling at 1219 has intersecting hipped roofs with projecting gables. The front gable has a sawn bargeboard, decorative finial, and a round-arched window. There is a dentiled band at the base of the gable. There is a gable-roofed dormer in the hipped roof with a sawn bargeboard. There are paired windows in the projecting gable bay and the entry is set back in the hipped-roof portion of the dwelling. The single-leaf, wood door has a transom and a single flanking window. The main hipped-roof extends to form the roof of the wrap around porch. The porch has a front pediment at the entry bay, turned posts, a turned balustrade and pierced brackets that form shallow arches between the posts. J. W. Clary designed the cottage located at 302 North 35th Street for T. E. Minson in 1909. This is a 1 ½-story dwelling with a basement and a cross-gabled roof. There is a Palladian window in the front gable with diamond-paned fixed lights and a tracery upper sash in the center window. There is a tripartite window on the first story and the single-leaf wood door has a transom and sidelight. The flat-roofed porch has Ionic columns and a turned balustrade. Built in 1910, 1109 Oakwood Avenue is a one-story, frame cottage with a hipped-roof with projecting gables. The front gable has a decorative truss and a sawn bargeboard. There are paired windows in the projecting gable bay and the entry is set back in the hipped-roof portion of the dwelling. The wrap-around porch has Doric columns, a picket balustrade and a box cornice.

Around 1900, commercial buildings were added to the neighborhood to serve the growing population. Many of these buildings were located on corners and incorporated a dwelling. Architecturally, they complimented the nearby residences and adopted the eclectic blending of architectural styles seen in the domestic buildings. The dwelling and store at 401 Chimborazo Boulevard is a good example of a frame commercial building of this period in the district. A slate shingle false mansard roof with a center front gable organizes the two-bay commercial portion of the building. There is a multi-light lunette window in the front, pedimented gable. The cornice has brackets, dentils, and a plain frieze. The store has a recessed corner entry. The dwelling entrance is set back and approached by a hipped-roof porch with turned posts, star and circle motif brackets and a dentiled cornice. A slate-shingle, false mansard roof with a decorative cornice with brackets and dentils and alternating plain and pierced frieze panels tops the entry bay to the dwelling. The brick commercial building at 3120 East Marshall Street, built in 1905 is of a similar design. The original cornice above the storefront has dentils, pierced frieze vents, and sawn brackets. There is a corbelled brick band below the bracketed cornice at the roofline. Richardson's Drugstore, at 501 North 31st Street, built in 1909 by John T. J. Melton, is another good example of a store and dwelling with a clipped corner entrance. The remaining commercial buildings at 520 North 31st Street, 500 North 33rd Street, 3301, 3303, 3306 and 3307 East Marshall Street are representative of the blending of architectural styles.

The two schools and one church erected in the district during this first period of marked growth add further to the architectural diversity of the district. Chimborazo School (now Chimborazo Manor) built in 1904 exemplifies the Beaux Arts style of architecture. The brick school has a box cornice, a corbelled stringcourse at the attic level and quoins at the corners. There are rusticated lintels and sills on all of the windows. There are pedimented dormers on the projecting bays that have rusticated semicircular louvered vents flanked by corner pilasters and a stringcourse below the arches. All of the dormers have box cornices with swags in the frieze. There is a one-story, one-bay, hipped roof porch on the façade that has Scamozzi columns on brick piers and a box cornice. Rusticated brick walls with corbelled brick caps flank the grand entry stairs. On the north-elevation, there is a stoop with at the entrance with a roof supported by brackets. The north entrance door has a large multi-paned fanlight above a six-light transom and double leaf doors with sidelights. Charles M. Robinson designed Nathaniel Bacon School (Bacon Retirement Community) in 1915. Like the dwellings in the community Bacon displays and eclectic mixture of architectural elements. Corbeled brick pilasters divide the façade into three sections. A stone architrave with a projecting cornice emphasizes the recessed, central entry. Above the entry is a three-part band of nine-over-nine, double-hung windows, each topped with a three-light transom. Centered above the entrance bay at the roofline is a gabled parapet. Flanking the entrance, on each story, is a four-part band of nine-over-nine, double hung windows with three-light transoms. On either side of the entry bay is a bay with a five-part band of nine-over-nine, double hung windows with three-light transoms. There is a semicircular parapet centered over the band of windows. A stone coping unifies the parapets that are set in front of an end gable roof. Broaddus Memorial Church (Mount Carmel Baptist Church) designed by D. Wiley Anderson in 1911 is a Gothic Revival-style cruciform plan brick church. Stone capped buttresses delineate each bay and a three-story, crenellated entry tower at the southwest corner. A smaller two-story crenellated tower, at the southeast corner of the church building, provides entry into the apse end of the building. There is a small one-story crenellated tower adjacent to the east elevation of the two-story southeast tower. The smaller tower appears to be the vestry. There are decorative brick details at the attic story of each tower. The towers are capped with stone coping. There are lancet windows in all of the towers and double lancet windows at the first story of each tower. Lancet stained-glass windows flank a rosette window in the west elevation. There is a large four-part lancet window in the south elevation and paired rectangular stained-glass windows line the nave. All entries are recessed. Corbelled Tudor arches frame two entries and an elliptical arch frames one entry. The church is set on a raised stone water table and granite stairs provide access to the raised entries.

World War I to World War II (1917-1945)

The Oakwood-Chimborazo district experienced another period of growth between 1923 and 1926 especially in the area east of North 32nd Street and north of N Street. The property of Edwin Pleasants was subdivided in 1924, and in 1927, the Lynbrook Realty Company platted the Glenwood Park development on this land. Glenwood Park was the largest single development in the district. The north-south streets (37th, 38th and 39th) followed the city grid but the east-west-streets (Glenwood Avenue and Crestview Road) meanders diagonally. Land was reserved along the western side of Crestview Road for a park and lots were laid out on the eastern side of North 39th Street but never developed. Architecturally, buildings continued to display an eclectic mixing of styles, but it was also during this period that the bungalow was introduced. The residence at 700 Chimborazo Boulevard, built ca. 1920 illustrates the continued use of blended styles. It is a 2 ½-story, frame hipped-roof dwelling with a pedimented dormer and a full façade hipped-roof porch with square posts, a picket balustrade, and a dentiled cornice. Bascom J. Rowlett designed the house at 3406 East Broad Street in 1931 that blends Classical and Colonial Revival elements. This two-story, Flemish bond dwelling has a side gable roof with shed roof extension to rear, three pedimented dormers, and a modillioned cornice. The gable-roofed porch has a broken pediment, fluted composite columns, and urns in the entablature. The western section of the porch has no roof and a Palladian-style entry that opens onto this section of the deck.

The 1920s and 1930s saw the introduction of the California influenced Craftsman style of architecture. In the Oakwood-Chimborazo district the style was expressed in Bungalow and American Foursquare-style dwellings. The Bungalow-style is well executed in a group of houses designed and built by the Montague Manufacturing Company in 1926 in the 800 block of Chimborazo Boulevard. These are 1 ½-story, frame dwellings with gable roofs with exposed end rafters and centered, gable-front dormers with brackets at the edges and in the center. There are tripartite windows in the dormers. The entries are single-leaf multi-light doors with sidelights. The main roof of the dwellings is extended to form the porch roofs that are supported by wooden posts on brick piers. Other examples of bungalow-style dwellings with side gable roofs and gable-roofed dormers can be seen at 1617 North 35th Street and 1229 North 36th Street. Other variants include side gable roofs with shed dormers as constructed at 1611 North 35th Street. The house at 1218 North 36th Street has a front gable roof with extended eaves, a four-light fixed window in the gable end, and a porch with battered square posts on brick piers. The 1200 block of North 36th Street contains a variety of Bungalow-style dwellings.

Another house by the Montague Manufacturing Company is an excellent example of a brick American Foursquare-style dwelling in the district. The Linwood C. Powers' residence was constructed in 1929 at 619 North 35th Street. It is a 2 ½-story, Flemish bond brick dwelling with a hipped-roof with cross-gable projections. There is a lunette window at the attic level of the projecting bay centered over paired windows on the second story and the entry on the first. The single-leaf wood door has sidelights and a transom. In the recessed bay, there is an eyebrow dormer at the attic level, paired windows on the second story and a tripartite window on the first. The hipped-roof porch has heavy battered posts at the corners with rusticated caps that support a clear span segmental arch. Corbelled bricks at the wall support impost blocks for the side arches. Another good example of an American Foursquare residence is found at 1615 North 35th Street a two-story, frame dwelling with a hip roof with wide eaves. The hipped-roof porch has Tuscan posts on brick piers and a picketed balustrade. Several other examples are found in the 1200 block of North 36th Street. In 1925, Max Ruehrmund designed a group of front-gable American Foursquare-style houses at 1017-1023 Oakwood Avenue.

The 1920s also saw the construction of the last two eclectic cottages in the district. The dwelling at 1018 North 35th Street is 1 ½-stories with a hipped-roof and projecting gables. The front gable has a sawn bargeboard and a one-over-one window. There are paired windows in the projecting gable bay and the entry is set back in the hipped-roof portion of the dwelling. The hipped-roof porch has Tuscan columns, a picket balustrade and a box cornice. Reflecting more Colonial Revival influences 1100 North 35th Street is a two-story, stuccoed-frame dwelling with cross-gambrel roofs and projecting gables. The front gambrel has a decorative truss and two, six-over-one windows. The four-bay main block of the house is recessed below the gambrel. The single-leaf, wood door has a transom. There are two, one-over-one windows to one side of the door and a single window on the other. The gambrel projects to form the roof of the porch. The porch has Doric columns, a turned balustrade and a box cornice. The porch has a circular projection at one end. 1212 North 36th Street, ca 1920, is a one-story, frame cottage with a cross-gable roof—the front gable is clipped. The building has wide eaves and a projecting bay on the south elevation. Other examples of much simpler cottages are located in the 1200 block of North 36th Street. By the 1940s, these simple one-story cottages had evolved into minimal traditional houses as built in the 1600 block of North 35th Street.

Apartment buildings in varying styles were constructed throughout the neighborhood in the nineteen-teens and twenties. In 1919, Max Ruehrmund designed an eclectic group of apartment buildings in the 3100 block of East Leigh Street with false mansard roof over the central section of the façade flanked by raised parapets. The flat roof porches have box cornices, square posts, and picketed balustrades. Ruehrmund designed another series of apartments in 1923 for the 700 block of Chimborazo Boulevard. These two-story, brick buildings have central multi-light entry doors flanked on either side by paneled doors with lights and six-over-six windows. On the second story centered over the entry are two, ten-light casement windows flanked on either side by paneled doors with lights and six-over-six windows. Two ogee-arched parapets with decorative brick patterns and rowlock coping are centered over the outer bays. There are full façade porches with Doric columns and box cornices. Rooftop balustrades unify the composition. Ruehrmund designed a similar set of apartments, 1017–1021 ½ Oakwood Avenue, in 1925. The buildings at 311–313 North 33rd Street are good examples of a pair of two-story brick apartments with simplified Colonial Revival elements. Six-over-six windows flank three central doors on the first floor. On the second floor of the façade are two narrow eight-light casement windows in the center that are flanked by paneled doors with lights and six-over-six windows. All of the windows and doors have segmental arches and brick sills.

Above the second story, window heads is a soldier stringcourse that runs the length of the buildings. There are two-story, porches with square columns on brick piers on the first story and square, wooden posts on the second story. Both porch stories have a wooden balustrade and a box cornice between the stories.

The number of businesses in the district expanded during this period, and as in the past the commercial buildings added architectural interest to the corners and block faces of the area. One of the unique commercial buildings is the Mission style storefront at 3118 East Marshall Street. Built in the 1920s, this one-story store has a stepped parapet with a clock in the center. There are corner pilasters, a paneled base, and box cornice on the storefront. Another interesting building is the former Richmond Cold Storage and Ice Station built ca. 1930 at 500 North 31st Street. The Art Deco-style building has pylons with corbelled brick triangles that delineate the bays. A number of one-store brick commercial buildings were constructed in the 3300 block of East Marshall Street. These simple buildings have a variety of embellishments including soldier-course stringcourses and false mansards with decorative pressed tin shingles. The two-story commercial buildings at 3519 M Street and 726 North 33rd Street perpetuate the tradition of incorporating a residence. The M Street building also continues the use of diverse styles on a single building. The two-story, frame dwelling and store combines Late Victorian, Italianate and Colonial Revival elements. The house has a cornice on the façade with brackets, dentils, and pierced vents in the frieze. On the second story, there are decorative projecting lintels with edge brackets and dentils. The first story has full-length windows on the front façade and there is a one-story, three-bay, full-width front porch. This porch has Scamozzi columns, a turned balustrade, a plain frieze, and a dentil and modillion cornice. The front entrance has a double leaf wood paneled door with a stained glass transom. The house has a hipped metal standing seam roof, weatherboard siding, and a solid brick foundation. The store and residence at 726 North 33rd Street incorporates simplified colonial Revival elements in the use of decorative brick panes and a stepped parapet.

Three churches and a school where constructed in the district between 1917 and 1945. Architecturally, they add tremendously to the overall character of the neighborhood. The neighborhood is unified by the diversity of its architecture. Built in 1919, St. Anthony's Maronite Church (St. Stephens Baptist Church) is a frame, Late 19th and Early 20th Century Revival-style church with Gothic Revival elements. There is a square corner tower with double doors, an intermediate pent roof, and a peaked roof with a bell-cast topped with a cross. The main block of the church has a front gable roof. Gothic-arched stained glass windows flank a central door. The entry portico has a front pediment and Doric columns. Also built in 1919, Oakwood Baptist Church was designed by Herbert Levi Cain. F. H. Boatwright was the builder. It is a stuccoed Classical Revival style cruciform plan church. Four gable-roofed wings extend from a raised elliptical center with lower shed roofed projections at the junctures of the main block and the wings. The gable roof of the façade extends to create a pedimented portico supported by Tuscan columns. A lunette is centered in the pediment. A box cornice with a plain frieze encircles the building. Thomas Branch Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church is similar to St. Anthony's Church. It is a simple frame church that combines classical and Gothic Revival elements. The entry bay is projected slightly from the main body of the church with a pedimented, front gable roof and central, double leaf doors with a Gothic arched art glass transom. There are Gothic arched art glass windows in the sides of the projecting entry bay. The main body of the church rises above the entry bay with a pedimented front gable roof. A continuous box cornice and plain frieze unifies the two sections of the building. There is a single Gothic arched, art glass window in the façade on either side of the entry bay or four similar windows on the side elevations. A two-bay pedimented wing extends to the west at the rear of the building. In 1927, Charles M. Robinson designed the one-story, Sunday school addition. The building has centered double doors with a circular transom flanked by two casement windows. A stringcourse extends from the spring line of the arch over the doors to form the head of the windows. A front gabled parapet further unifies the composition.

The most dominate building in the historic district in both scale and style is the East End Junior High School (Onslow Minnis Middle School) designed in 1929 by Charles M. Robinson. The three-story, thirteen-bay occupies the entire eastern side of the 700 block of North 37th Street. The Neo-classical style masonry building incorporates Egyptian and Greek revival influences. The base of the building, to the sills of the first floor windows is faced with granite. The remainder of the building is coursed concrete. The entry-bay, slightly projected from the main body of the building, is an elaborate combination of Egyptian and Greek motifs. Egyptian pylons surround the recessed entry on the first story, a Greek key band separates the first and second stories, and two-story Doric columns and pilasters frame paired windows and a panel with dancing figures and Griffins holding a clock. The columns support an elaborate frieze with classical figures, triglyphs, and metopes that unifies the façade. The triple windows in the flanking bays are set in recessed planes and separated by pilasters. Each window band is composed of a central six-over-six window flanked by a four-over-four window. The end bays are composed of two-story Doric columns and pilasters that flank a recessed niche holding a life size classical figurine.

World War II to the Present (1945- 2003)

By the end of World War II, much of the Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District had been fully developed so that new construction was relegated to infilling vacant lots. There was some concentrated development in the 800 and 900 blocks of North 37th Street. It was also at this time that the majority of the houses in the Glenwood Park neighborhood were built. For the most part these houses are built in the Minimal Traditional or Ranch-styles. An interesting grouping of stripped down Colonial Revival-style houses was built in 1946 in the 600 block of North 39th Street. These are two-story, center-hall plan, brick dwellings with one-story projecting porches at one end of the house. In form, the houses are identical with variations in the decorative motifs. Some of the houses have semicircular embossed concrete fans over the doors and rusticated concrete lintels over the first story windows with projecting keystones, and concrete panels above the second story windows with embossed swags. Others have fluted architraves at the entry door. It was also during this period that the black middle class began moving into the district and built brick and frame ranch-style dwellings for themselves. Two very good examples can be seen at 610 and 614 North 39th Street. The houses in the 900 block of North 37th Street are small, with fewer details and appear to have been speculatively built. The Evans Super Market built in 1955 at 400 Chimborazo Boulevard further illustrates the move towards the construction of plainer less ornamented architecture.

Cemeteries and Parks

It is impossible to place the cemeteries and parks within a set period or architectural style because they have grown and evolved over time. Visually, Chimborazo Park, Oakwood, and Evergreen cemeteries create north and south terminuses for the district and lend relief to the urban landscape in between. Oakwood and Evergreen cemeteries are modeled after Hollywood Cemetery with its rolling terrain and curvilinear roads with cobblestone paving. Oakwood Cemetery was established in 1854, on sixty-six acres of farmland in eastern Henrico County. Today the cemetery contains 175 acres. The cemetery is picturesque with rolling hills that fall toward Stoney Run Creek that meanders along the eastern boundary and then bisects the cemetery. Paved roads with cobble stone curbs and retaining walls meander through the cemetery linking the two entrances from Oakwood Avenue and Nine Mile Road. The cemetery is divided into essentially three sections. To the southeast, along East Richmond Road is the 7 ½-acre Confederate cemetery, the burial site for over 16,000 soldiers. To the northwest of the Confederate cemetery and south of Stony Run Creek is the oldest section of the cemetery. This section of the cemetery is a rolling plateau that drops off dramatically to the creek on three sides. Many of the markers are of high artistic value and the hills are dotted with a few scattered mausoleums. Within the Confederate section of the cemetery, two cannons flank a granite obelisk. The memorial was dedicated in 1866 and erected by the Ladies Oakwood Memorial Association. Directly north is an iron gazebo with a pyramidal roof that was used as the speaker's platform during numerous Memorial Day celebrations. At the northern edge of the older section of the cemetery is a Public Restroom facility. Built ca. 1880, the brick Italian Renaissance style building has a green tiled hip roof. The pedimented entry has a semicircular architrave with fluted pilasters and voluted brackets. A ca. 1920 formed concrete bridge with paneled sides and a flared cap connects the two sections of the cemetery. The Superintendent's Office is a modern ranch style dwelling. At the western edge of the older section is a complex with a Dutch Colonial Revival style stable and carriage house. J. T. Nuckols built the gates at the Oakwood Avenue and Nine Mile Road entrances to the cemetery in 1911. The Classical Revival gates have a curvilinear brick wall with corner pillars topped with Grecian urns. The wrought iron gates have scrolled details.

The Oakwood Hebrew Cemetery, located just outside the gates to Oakwood Cemetery, was established in the late nineteenth century. A chapel was erected in 1949 to demarcate the entrance. The Colonial Revival brick structure has a cross gable roof. The building is flanked on the northeast by rusticated stone columns with Acorns wrapped in oak leaf capitols and a wrought iron fence.

Abutting the eastern boundary of Oakwood Cemetery is Evergreen Cemetery. The Evergreen Cemetery Association was formed in 1891 with the express purpose of establishing a black cemetery that would rival Hollywood Cemetery on the James River. Forty-six acres were initially purchased in Henrico County. The cemetery now contains fifty-nine acres. The firm of John T. Redd and Sons "graced the cascading hills with concrete walking paths and paved the main road into Evergreen form East Richmond Road with cobblestones to create a memorial park fit for royalty. The precipice to the west of the cemetery was designed to overlook a pond and rolling creek. People passing by on Stony Run Road were able to look up and see the marble statutes, granite obelisks and elegant monuments. As colored aristocrats were laid to rest, the hills stood out with white marble and sandy granite monuments."[4] True to its mission Evergreen became the final resting place of many of Richmond's leading African American citizens, including Maggie Lena Walker, John Mitchell, Jr., and Rev. Andrew J. Bowler. Unfortunately, there was no provision for perpetual care and the cemetery has become overgrown.

Chimborazo Park is composed of a large landscaped space with several buildings and structures throughout the grounds. The name Chimborazo comes from a volcano in Ecuador. It is believed that the Richmond hill was dubbed Chimborazo around 1802, the year of Alexander von Humboldt's unsuccessful attempt to scale the mountain in Ecuador. In an 1896, interview with Dr. James McCaw, administrator of the Civil War hospital on the hill, he claims to have dubbed the place Chimborazo.[5] Chimborazo Hill is one of the highest vantages in the city with steep bluffs and panoramic views of the James River. The park is typical of the mid-nineteenth century parks originating throughout the Unites States such as Central Park in New York City. Sited at the brow of a hill overlooking the James River, the site served as a hospital during the Civil War. The Civil War Medical Museum is located in a Greek Revival-style building sited on the northwest corner of the park and built as the U.S. Weather Bureau. A poured concrete walk runs in front and along the sides of the museum building with a split rail fence adjacent to the eastern walk. An asphalt parking lot adjoins the southeast corner of the medical museum building. Trees screen the surface lot form the public view with additional trees scattered around the building grounds. Chimborazo Park is accessed via asphalt drives east of the museum building. Upon entering the park, the drives flow past a circular expanse with plantings and park benches. The drive continues past the circle meandering through the park moving west past a Liberty statue before returning east past a gazebo and octagonal park house then exiting onto East Broad Street. Trees line the paved drive and concrete walks throughout the park with open grassed expanses between. Southeast of the park entry and medical museum is a small metal structure on a poured concrete foundation. The late twentieth century structure is approximately four feet square and six feet high and constructed of wrought iron with a pyramidal roof. South of the wrought iron, structure is an octagonal gazebo. The late twentieth century gazebo has an asphalt shingled cat-slide roof with finial, wide bracketed and dentiled eaves, fluted Tuscan columns and center support, and a poured concrete foundation. West of the gazebo is the Liberty Statue (DHR #127-0821-0001) dedicated in 1951. South of the gazebo and Liberty Statue on a bluff overlooking the James River is a commemorative stone. The stone, imbedded in an elevated slab of concrete, is centered in a semi-circular concrete pad edged by a low stone retaining wall. A plaque on the commemorative stone reads as follows:

"DeGratia Virginia Condita
Powhatan Stone

An old Indian Stone removed from and now overlooking 'Powhatan Seat' a royal residence of King Powhatan when Captain John Smith and his fellow 'adventurers' made the first permanent English settlement in this country at Jamestown, Virginia 1607.
'Powhatan Seat' was the residence from 1726-1865 of the ancestors of Peter H. Mayo by whose daughters this stone was presented to the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities."

West of the Powhatan Stone again located on a bluff overlooking the James River is another commemorative stone. The stone, imbedded in an elevated slab of concrete, is centered in a semi-circular concrete pad edged by a low stone retaining wall. A plaque on the commemorative stone reads as follows:

On this Hill Stood
Chimborazo Hospital
1862-1865

Established by Surgeon General S. P. Moore, C.S.A.
Directed by James B. McCan
At that time, it was the Largest military hospital in the world
It consisted of 150 buildings and 100 tents
And cared for 76,000 patients with a
Mortality of less than 10 percent.

This tablet is placed by the Confederate Memorial Literary Society
1934

A Highway Marker commemorating the Civil War hospital is located at the intersection of East Broad Street and North 32nd Street on the northwest corner of the park.

The Civil War Medical Museum building, sited near the intersection of East Broad and North 32nd Street, is a two-story, three-bay, Greek Revival Style masonry building with corner quoins. The building has a flat roof with parapet, wide dentiled eaves, and open rail with turned balusters at the attic level. A molded wood stringcourse delineates the attic level. There are one-story, one-bay, porches with fluted Ionic columns and turned balustrades on both the first and second stories at the front and rear entrances. The building has a raised water table with alternating brick and stone foundation. Crepe myrtle and magnolia trees hide the paved surface lot and fenced utility area from public view. The building was designed in 1909 by Peter J. White and originally served the United States Weather Bureau and for many years, the was used as the headquarters for the Richmond National Battlefield Park, administered by the National Park Service.

The ca. 1900 Park House is sited near the eastern end of Chimborazo Park. It is a one-story, octagonal seven-course American bond brick building. The building has an eight-sided roof and overhanging eaves with bird's mouth exposed rafters, asphalt shingles and a finial at the apex. The building has four casement windows each with 12 lights, fanlight transom, and paneled base. The building has a vaulted recessed entry with a single leaf, multi-light, wood door with sidelights on the north façade. The building also has a double-leaf, metal door with flush vertical sidelights and fan light transom. There is an open one-story, fifteen-bay porch with fluted Doric columns, horizontal pipe railing and frieze. The frieze is finished with triglyphs and metopes at the head of the columns and between open blocks. To retain the porch theme, engaged columns and frieze are continued around the eastern side of the building. The open porch is approached by a double flight of steps with a center landing at the entrance. A low wall encloses stairs.

There are two noncontributing parks in the district. The James S. Christian, Jr. Place is located in the triangle at the intersections of P Street, Oakwood Avenue and Chimborazo Boulevard. There are concrete planters at the corners, benches at the sides, and a circular planter in the center with a memorial to James S. Christian (26 October 1918 to 29 December 1982). The other noncontributing park is the Bill Robinson Playground in the 700 block of North 35th Street. There is a ca. 1980 building associated with the playground.

Secondary Buildings (Garages and Sheds)

There are 528 secondary buildings in the historic district. This grouping of buildings includes carriage houses, garages, sheds and carports—all of those utilitarian buildings found in rear yards and at the alleys. Of interest is the ca. 1890, two-story frame stable found at 1002 North 36th Street. The building is one-bay wide with a hay door and arm for a pulley system to raise bales of hay to the second story. There are two brick carriage houses in the 3500 block of East Broad Street and in the 3300 block of East Marshall Street. There are 250 garages in the historic district, twenty-eight of which are noncontributing. The garages are constructed out of a variety of materials—brick, wood, corrugated metal and early concrete block. There are shed and gable roof variations and one- and two-bay examples. The one-bay corrugated metal garages have an interesting feature. The overhead track for the sliding door extends out beyond the side of the building where it is supported by a post. It is designed so that when the door is fully opened it is out of the way. There are 276 sheds in the neighborhood and, of these, 227 are noncontributing. The contributing sheds are constructed of a variety of materials and in a variety of forms. For the most part, the noncontributing sheds are prefabricated metal and frame buildings.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District is eligible for listing on the National Register Historic Places under criteria A and C. The district is eligible under criterion A because of its associations with early speculative residential development following the introduction of a local trolley line. Samuel P. Cowardin, Superintendent for the Richmond Traction Company, owned several large tracts of land in the district, which he developed in the early twentieth century after the trolley line was constructed along Oakwood Avenue. The district also includes the site of Chimborazo Hospital and Oakwood Cemetery, both of which have importance associated with the Civil War. The utilization of the ward system and women as matrons at Chimborazo Hospital were innovations in the practice of medicine at the time that affected permanent changes in the field. As the site of the first Memorial Day celebration in Richmond, Oakwood Cemetery influenced the development of the national holiday. The district also reflects the importance of a growing African American middle class in the City of Richmond as illustrated by the establishment of Evergreen Cemetery in 1891 and the racial transition of the community during the 1950s and 1960s. The Oakwood-Chimborazo historic district is eligible under criterion C because of its unique collection of late-nineteenth and early- through mid-twentieth-century dwellings that are an eclectic mixture of architectural styles. The buildings range from large brick dwellings facing Chimborazo Park to modest frame residences and cottages on the side streets. The corners are punctuated with stores, churches and schools. Many of Richmond's leading architects designed buildings located in the district. For the most part the buildings are well preserved with a high level of integrity.

HISTORIC BACKGROUND

Early National and the Antebellum Periods (1789 –1860)

As with much of the eastern portion of the City of Richmond, a discussion of the early history of the Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District must begin with Col. Richard Adams and his heirs. Around 1769, Adams began purchasing enormous tracts of land to the north and east of Church Hill in anticipation that the city would grow to the east. The 1789 decision to move the capitol from Williamsburg to Richmond only strengthened Adams' conviction that the city would expand in an easterly direction. In anticipation of this growth, Adams laid out his vast holdings in the same grid pattern as the rest of the city. Adams also offered then-Governor Thomas Jefferson his choice of prime building sites for the new capitol building. Ultimately, Shockoe Hill was chosen as the site for the capitol and Adams' vision of the easterly expansion of the city was dashed. Richard Adams died in 1800 and left the majority of his estate to his eldest son and namesake, Richard Adams II. Richard Adams II died in 1817 leaving no children. By his will his executors were directed to divide his vast estate, with an estimated worth of $1,200,000 in 1821, between his nieces and nephews.[6] A plat for the division of Richard Adams' land shows that it encompassed much of the current historic district from Broad Street north to R Street and from 30th to 34th streets. Thomas Rutherfoord owned large tracts of land to the south, west and north and Christopher Walthall, James Malone and Samuel Pleasants owned large tracts east of 34th Street.[7] With the exception of the Spring Garden tract, which Richard Adams I sold to George Winston prior to 1787, very little of the area was developed before 1835 when his heirs began to sell off larger tracts. The greater Church Hill area began its measured growth only towards the end of the 19th century as land was subdivided into building lots or resold as investment property."[8]

In the thirty years following Richmond's selection as the state capitol, its population nearly tripled from 3,761 in 1790 to 12,067 in 1820.[9] The growth in population created a demand for burial space. Most of Richmond's early citizens were buried either in privately owned cemeteries or in church graveyards. But by the early nineteenth century, these places were filling up creating the need for a municipal cemetery. In 1820, the City acquired four acres on Shockoe Hill for the city's first municipal cemetery. Hollywood, a 42-acre private cemetery was established in 1847. By the 1850s, it was necessary for the city to purchase and develop another cemetery. To this end, 66 acres in Henrico County were purchased from Fendall Griffin and the heirs of William Cook. Additional land has been acquired and today Oakwood contains 175 acres. The first burial took place in 1856.

Civil War (1861-1865)

The war came quickly to Richmond. In December 1860, South Carolina seceded from the Union, followed very quickly by five other states. During February of 1861, a new government was formed and Jefferson Davis was elected provisional president. On 12 April 1861, South Carolina fired on federal troops at Fort Sumter and three days later President Lincoln called out 75,000 volunteers to quell the insurrection in the south. Virginia voted to secede from the Union on 16 April 1861 and on 22 April Robert E. Lee accepted the post of major general commanding the Virginia forces. Daily, young men began arriving in Richmond from all over the south to train under General Lee. Army depots were established at several places throughout the area including Chimborazo Hill. On 29 May 1861, Jefferson Davis arrived in Richmond, the new confederate capital. In June 1861, the task of building the defenses around Richmond began. "Street cleaners were put to work building the fortifications and unemployed free Negroes were seized off the streets for similar tasks."[10] There were three lines of defense around the city. The inner line consisted of "star forts", as many as twenty-five by 1864, that extended around the city from the James River on the east to the James on the west. The river was the southern boundary of the city in 1861. These forts were constantly occupied by a detachment of ten or more soldiers. An intermediate line of earthworks encompassed the city in a five-mile radius from the capital building and the outer line was set at a seven to nine mile radius. Star Fort number four or Confederate Gun Battery Fourteen, part of the inner defenses, was located in the district near the intersection of P, North 35th and the East Richmond Road.

Originally intended to serve as winter quarters it was determined that Chimborazo Hill was better suited for a hospital, given there were already two or three hundred sick soldiers quartered there.[11] When the Confederate army took possession of the hill it was separated from Church Hill by Bloody Run. A bridge needed to be constructed and the Broad Street extended to link the hospital in Henrico County with the city. The forty-acre complex was organized around five hospitals, one for each state represented—Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, and Georgia, and each hospital had thirty wards. The wards were one-story board-and-batten buildings that measured 100' by 20' and were furnished with two rows of beds and a center aisle. In addition to the wards and hospital buildings, there were 100 Sibley tents, five soup-houses, a bakery, a brewery, and five icehouses. Seven thousand to 10,000 loaves of bread were baked daily, and up to 400 kegs of beer brewed. Caves or vaults were dug at the eastern end of the hill to keep the beer. The hospital leased nearby Tree Hill farm for the pasturage of 100 to 200 cows and 300 to 500 goats. There were also gardens to provide fresh produce for the patients.[12] During its existence more than 76,000 sick and wounded Confederate soldiers were treated at Chimborazo. Chimborazo was one of the finest hospitals the south and possessed a mortality rate of less than twenty percent. The utilization of a ward system and the large-scale use of women as matrons and ward attendants were medical innovations pioneered at Chimborazo. The memoirs of Phoebe Yates Pember, a matron of one division of Chimborazo Hospital, document her experience there from 1862 to 1865 and describe conditions in a major Confederate hospital.

To the north of the hospital was Oakwood Cemetery. As the war began to take an increasing toll, the Council of the City of Richmond authorized the Committee on Oakwood Cemetery to designate a place for the burial of Confederate soldiers who died in Richmond or Henrico County. The committee offered the Secretary of War as much acreage as might be necessary to bury the dead. On 13 January 1862, John Redford, the Keeper of Oakwood Cemetery reported that up to 31 December 1861, "eight white females, five white males, two females of color, and twelve male Negroes had been buried in Oakwood Cemetery. He also stated that up to January 12, 1862, 540 Confederate soldiers had been interred."[13] Mr. Redford reported to Council on 8 September 1862 that in the preceding year 4,882 soldiers had been buried at Oakwood and by January 1863 the total had risen to 7,120.[14] The final count rose to 17,200 after the war as soldiers were reinterred from the battlefields around Richmond. Union soldiers, black and white that died in city prisons or hospitals were also buried at Oakwood Cemetery. Cemetery custodians struggled with the effort to provide maintenance for the large number of graves.

Reconstruction and Growth (1865-1917)

Twenty-eighth Street was the farthest street to the east that linked Broad Street and Nine Mile Road. Broad Street was interrupted just east of 28th Street because of the ravine at Bloody Run Creek. Twenty-ninth and 30th streets stopped at Marshall Street and 31st Street terminated at Clay Street.

Thirty-second and 33rd street ran for two blocks between N and P streets and the East Richmond Road headed diagonally to the northeast from the intersection of P and 33rd streets. There still existed a few large estates and sparsely scattered dwellings and homesteads. The Oakwood-Chimborazo area lay outside of the City of Richmond until 1867 when the land west of North 31st Street, south of Marshall Street and east of North 35th Street was annexed. The bulk of the district was still a part of Henrico County until 1906 when the City of Richmond annexed the area to the east and north.

On 13 April 1866, the federal government adopted a resolution creating national cemeteries and made provisions that the Union dead would be removed from battlefields and other cemeteries to be reinterred in these new cemeteries. The remains of nearly 5,700 Union soldiers were reinterred at the new National Cemetery on Williamsburg Road. In response to the resolution which excluded the Confederate dead, a group of 100 women met and formed the Ladies Memorial Association for the Confederate Dead in Oakwood Cemetery to provide care for the graves of the veterans buried there and adopted 10 May as an annual memorial day. "On Thursday, May 10, most city businesses closed in honor of the day; the first recorded Memorial Day in Richmond. At 10:00 A.M. a brief service was held at St. John's Church, then the crowds walked to the Confederate section at Oakwood Cemetery. After the speeches ended, the audience placed flowers on the graves and assisted with the ongoing effort to clean up the cemetery.[15] A similar celebration was held at Hollywood Cemetery at the end of May and other memorial associations throughout the Virginia and the South held comparable observances. It is generally assumed that Confederate Memorial Day celebrations were the inspiration for today's national Memorial Day.

Within weeks of the surrender at Appomattox, Chimborazo Hospital and its buildings were turned over to the Freedmen's Bureau to provide temporary shelter for Black families in the city. By 1866, the hill had become a permanent black settlement complete with a church. Also in 1866, F. Frommel had acquired the use of the vaults at the eastern end of Chimborazo Hill and was operating a brewery there. Joseph Bacher acquired seven acres at Chimborazo including the vaults around 1870. Bacher, the third brewer to try to operate a successful brewery on the hill met with failure quickly. The vaults proved to be too warm to keep beer at the desired temperature and ice was too costly and scarce. Bacher went bankrupt, sold his seven acres to the city and returned to New England. In 1874, the City of Richmond began acquiring property for a park in the eastern part of the city that included the old hospital site.

By 1896, the Richmond Traction Company was operating two trolley lines in the area. One line ran along Venable Street to Q Street then out Oakwood Avenue to the cemetery. The trolley continued east beyond the cemetery to the gravel pits south of East Richmond Road near Gillies Creek. A trolley barn was located on the eastern side of Oakwood Avenue near the entrance to the cemetery. A second line operated along Broad Street from the reservoir on the west to Chimborazo Park on the east. The Richmond Railway and Electric Company operated a loop through the neighborhood that traveled from Broad and 29th streets north to P Street then west to 25th Street where it turned south to Jefferson Avenue. The track followed Jefferson Avenue to 21st Street where it turned south back to Broad. Commercial development began to appear in the neighborhood. Around 1900, Hiram H. Herbert opened a confectioner shop at 401 Chimborazo Boulevard. Grocery stores followed at 520 North 31st Street, 500 North 33rd Street, and 3120, 3301, and 3306 East Marshall Street. Morgan B. Wilhelm operated a General Merchandise store at 3307 East Marshall Street in 1915 and Richardson's Drugstore opened at 501 North 31st Street in 1909. As late as 1889 land was still held in large tracts by families such as Cowardin, Canepa, Brill, Schaaf and Brauer. The property east of Oakwood Avenue was laid out first by East Virginia Land and Improvement Company. They also owned land around 37th and 38th Streets but developed separately in 1915 as the Vineyard Tract, "taking its name from the vineyard operated there by Dr. J. B. McCarty around 1877."[16] The land west of Oakwood Avenue was surveyed and subdivided around 1908.

A black middle class had begun to coalesce in the 1840s. Church societies and associations were at the heart of the process by which people, both free blacks and slaves, defined themselves, especially in the emerging black middle class. Congregations served as mini governments and enforced the rules of evangelicalism, temperance and benevolence. "In Richmond, evangelical religion and benevolence, marriage and a paternalistic household, steady wages or profits, and education were the characteristics of a black middle class that appeared after Emancipation but began its formation years earlier."[17] The black middle class was composed of teachers, lawyers, businessmen and ministers but more importantly it was dependent upon black professional and laboring women. The arrival of the black middle class is no better illustrated than by the founding of Evergreen Cemetery in 1891 and the people buried there. The goal was to develop a cemetery that would rival Hollywood Cemetery, the elite resting-place for Richmond's most influential white citizens. Evergreen was to be a "memorial park fit for royalty."[18] The cemetery was the most prestigious place in Richmond where an African-American could be laid to rest. It proved so attractive that bodies were removed from older, less distinguished cemeteries and reinterred at Evergreen. A four-foot angel stands atop the grave of Rebecca Mitchell, near the grave of her son, John R. Mitchell, Jr. John Mitchell was born 11 July 1863 of slave parents. He was educated in church schools and at the Richmond High and Normal School. He taught school for three years and served on Richmond City Council from 1888 to 1896. In 1921, he ran for governor. In 1884, "he took over as editor of the Richmond Planet, a weekly newspaper for blacks. The Planet grew to be one of the country's leading black newspapers."[19] It was from his desk at the Planet that Mitchell fought tirelessly against injustice. He was also founder and President of the Mechanics Savings Bank and was the only black member of the American Bankers Association. Mitchell died 3 December 1929 and was buried at Evergreen. Across the lane from Mitchell's grave is the grave of Maggie Lena Walker marked by a large cross. The graves of several other family members surround Walker's. Walker was born on 15 July 1867. Her mother was a former slave and her father, a white abolitionist. Like Mitchell she attended the Richmond High and Normal School and taught school for three years. She attended business school and later received a Master's degree in business administration from Virginia Union University. In 1886, she married Armistead Walker. In 1897, she began a long leadership role with the Independent Order of St. Luke, a fraternal business organization. In 1903, she founded and became the president of the St. Luke's Penny Savings Bank, making Mrs. Mitchell one of the first women to become the president of a chartered bank. In addition to her achievements in business, Maggie Walker was also known for her unselfish community service. Maggie Walker died 15 December 1934. Her house in Jackson Ward is a National Historic Landmark. Not far from the graves of Mitchell and Walker is the grave of Rev. John Andrew Bowler. Rev. Bowler was one of Richmond's foremost leaders in the field of education. He began teaching at the elementary school level in 1882 and later organized the George Mason School. He served in the educational field for over fifty years. Around 1900, he became an ordained minister and was the founding pastor of Mt. Olivet Baptist Church. Evergreen is also the final resting-place African-American veterans of the Spanish-American War and World War I and "Buffalo" soldiers who served in the U.S. Cavalry following the Civil War. There are over 5,000 graves at Evergreen.

World War I to World War II (1917-1945)

The Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District experienced another sustained period of growth from 1923 to 1926 as families like the Cowardins, Pleasants and Andersons began to subdivide and sell off their holdings. Edwin Pleasants lay out and subdivided his family estate known as Pleasants Woods in 1924. Three years later, Lynbrook Realty Corporation platted the same property as Glenwood Park. The property west of 34th (named Chimborazo Boulevard in 1910) was platted before 1876 but the land east of 34th was not subdivided until after the turn of the century. The Cowardins owned the land fronting Chimborazo Park that was gradually subdivided. Large townhouses were built on the resulting lots one at a time over a period of roughly forty-years. The M. G. Billup House constructed in 1931 was one of the last houses built on Broad Street east of 34th Street. The Cowardins and Pleasants also held the land north of Clay into the 20th century and did not develop it until the 1920s. Prior to 1930, the trolley line was removed from Broad Street and relocated to Marshall Street. This encouraged commercial development in the Marshall Street corridor. By 1944, buses were operating on Broad Street to 34th Street where they turned north. By 1949 the trolleys were gone. Unlike many other neighborhoods of this era, the development of the Oakwood and Chimborazo neighborhoods was not dependent upon the trolley lines like the new suburbs being created to the north and west.

World War II to the Present (1945 – 2003)

Little development has taken place in the Oakwood-Chimborazo historic district in the years following World War II but significant changes have taken place. Houses were constructed in the 600 block of North 39th Street in 1946, completing the Glenwood Park development. The next wave of construction came in the 1960s when houses were constructed along the eastern edge of the district by and for the areas growing African American population. A comparison of census figures for the years 1940, 1950 and 1960 illustrate the racial transition of the neighborhood. In 1940, there were 6,885 white and 2,124 African Americans residents. The change in total population and racial composition between 1940 and 1950 was imperceptible. But the ten years between 1950 and 1960 saw a transformation in the community. By 1960, the white population in the neighborhood had dropped to 391 and the African American population had grown to 9,203. What is interesting is that the percentage of renter occupied housing units declined indicating that many of the new inhabitants in the area were owner occupants. This trend is contrary to the typical increase of absentee ownership and renter occupied housing normally observed in the transition of city neighborhoods.

"The east end area of Church Hill had grown up earlier adjacent to a major commercial and industrial district and housed the city's burgeoning white working-class…..Clearly, though, Richmond after 1900 came to be less 'a jumble of rich and poor, immigrant and native, black and white' and approached more nearly what Sam Bass Warner, Jr. referred to as the 'segregated city'….. The impact of streetcar suburban development was the segregation and isolation of the city's older neighborhoods…. The gradual exodus of the middle and upper classes to the suburbs enhanced fragmentation."[20] The transition of the neighborhood is clearly illustrated in the changing school populations. Chimborazo School opened in September 1905 with 377 white students. In 1911, an annex with additional classrooms and an auditorium were opened. In 1958, the remaining 280 white pupils were transferred to Nathaniel Bacon and Chimborazo school converted to a black school. The new Chimborazo school opened in 1968 and the old building was used as the Church Hill Opportunity Center and an annex of East End Middle School. The building was surplused in 1973 and privately rehabilitated as housing for the elderly in the 1980s.[21] Nathaniel Bacon School opened in September 1915 with 380 white pupils, and closed in September 1958 and the pupils were transferred to East End Middle school. The school was reopened in October 1958 with 351 Negro students from Chimborazo and George Mason schools. A ten-classroom addition was built in 1960 and between 1970 and 1982 the building served as an annex to the East End Middle School. Nathaniel Bacon closed June 1988 and was declared surplus property on 4 October 1988, converted to elderly housing.[22] East End Junior High School opened in September 1929 with 1,021 white students transferred from Bellevue Junior High School. In October 1958, the elementary grades were transferred from Nathaniel Bacon and the school closed June 1959. All of the pupils were transferred to Robert Fulton, Highland Park, Chandler and John Marshall schools. The school reopened in September 1959, as black Junior High, with grades seven to eight and 252 students. The building was damaged by a fire in 1964, was repaired and continued to operate until June 1991 when its programs merged with Mosby Middle School. In 1992, the building was renovated for use as a school and reopened as Onslow Minnis Middle School.[23]

Architects and Builders

The City of Richmond began requiring building permits in 1907, which offers a unique opportunity to identify the architects and builders of the dwellings, stores, schools and churches located in the Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District. Some of the architects and builders identified are among Richmond's best-known and most prolific designers, like D. Wiley Anderson, Charles M. Robinson, father and son architects Carl and Max Ruehrmund, and the firm of Carneal & Johnston. Perhaps best known for his designs of grand houses on Monument Avenue, David Wiley Anderson (1864-1940) was a self-taught architect who established his practice in Richmond around 1895. For a brief period in 1908 he was associated with Isaac T. Skinner, and in 1922 he moved his practice to Scottsville, Virginia. During his prolific career he designed "hundreds of buildings of various kinds and too numerous to mention."[24] Within the district, the design of Broaddus Memorial Church (1911), six residences in the 500-block of North 30th Street (1910), and 1204-1208 Oakwood Avenue (1909)[25] are attributed to D. Wiley Anderson teamed with builder A. B. Hubbard on all of these projects.

Charles Morrison Robinson (1867-1932), a noted architect of school and university buildings, was born in Hamilton, Virginia and studied architecture under D. S. Hopkins of Grand Rapids, Michigan, and under John K. Peebles of Norfolk, Virginia. In 1906, Robinson established his office in Richmond after a brief practice in Pittsburgh. Robinson designed school buildings throughout Virginia and was considered the architect for the Richmond public school system. Robinson also prepared site plans and designed buildings at the College of William and Mary, Mary Washington College, and at Virginia State, James Madison and Radford universities.[26] He designed two public buildings in the Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District – Thomas Branch Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church (1927) and the East End Junior High School (1928).

Carl August Ruehrmund (1855-1927) a native of Berlin, Germany, studied architecture and civil engineering at the Royal Academy of Architecture in Berlin. Ruehrmund immigrated to the United States in 1881 and arrived in Richmond in 1882 to supervise the construction of the additions to the Custom House and Post Office. He was briefly associated with Albert Lybrock and later with Albert Huntt. Many of his commissions were for the Phillips family, who were among Richmond's most active real estate developers.[27] Carl Ruehrmund designed the Chimborazo School annex in 1910 and a residence in the 1400 block of Oakwood Avenue in 1911. Max Ruehrmund studied engineering at the Virginia Military Institute and was associated with his father as Ruehrmund & Son between 1916 and 1919. From 1918 to 1925, Max was identified as the developer of several apartment buildings in the city and was often listed as the owner, contractor and architect. In the Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic District he designed two groupings of apartment buildings in the 700 block of Chimborazo Boulevard (1923) and the 3100 block of E. Leigh Street (1919). He also designed a series of frame dwellings in the 1000 block of Oakwood Avenue (1925).

The firm of Carneal and Johnston represents the partnership of William Leigh Carneal (1881-1958) and James Markham Ambler Johnston (1885-1974) that was formed in 1907 and continued posthumously into the 1990s. "A 1957 newspaper article estimated that Carneal and Johnston had designed 1,334 commercial and public structures."[28] The firm designed the Nathaniel Bacon School (1914) and a dwelling at 3208 E. Broad Street (1909). Builders John T. Nuckols and Fox and Sons are associated with these projects, respectively.

Lesser-known architects whose designs are seen in the Oakwood-Chimborazo Historic district are Herbert Levi Cain, W. A. Childrey, Beaufort N. Eubank, Charles H. Fisher, Bascomb J. Rowlett, E. A. and H. C. Smith, Isaac W. Throckmorton, and Peter J. White. Herbert Levi Cain (1888-ca 1960), born in Harrington, Delaware, received his architecture degree through International Correspondence School courses. He had arrived in Richmond around 1908 where he served as a draftsman in the offices of Scarborough & Howell. For a brief period he was associated with D. Wiley Anderson and in 1911 he joined with Clarence E. Anderson and Allan T. Shepherd to form Anderson, Cain and Shepherd.[29] By 1927, he largely dedicated his practice to church work. Cain is credited with the design of Apostolic Church and Oakwood Avenue Baptist Church. In 1909 and 1910, Wayne Aubrey Childrey designed two residences, 1221 Oakwood Avenue and one in the 300 block of North 33rd Street, within the district. Between 1910-1913, he teamed with Roy T. Sunday. The firm of Childrey & Sunday is credited with the design of a dwelling in the 300 block of Chimborazo Boulevard. The architects worked with builders H. E. Mills, J. St. Murman and W. S. Spires.

The design of 3009-3011 M Street in 1908 and 3001–3007 M Street in 1909 is attributed to Beaufort N. Eubank. On one of the building permits, Eubank was listed as a draftsman for Carl Ruehrmund. He also worked as a draftsman in the office of George R. Ragan during 1914-1915 and in 1920 formed a partnership with James A. W. Caldwell in Roanoke.[30] George N. Skelton, a carpenter, whose address is shown as 1407 North 29th Street was listed as the builder for both properties. Charles H. Fisher, a freight clerk for the C & O Railroad commenced his architectural practice in Richmond by 1906. From 1910-1911 he ran the Richmond office of Hill C. Linthicum, established North Carolina architects as C. H. Fisher & Company. He was also associated for a short period with Charles G. Rabenstein.[31] In 1910, he designed a stable for 3102 E. Broad Street and a dwelling at 3400 Q Street. For these projects he worked with builders J. T. Nuckols and Jesse W. Hall.

Bascom J. Rowlett, the designer of a wide variety of buildings conducted an active architectural practice in Richmond between 1909 and 1940.[32] For a time he was associated with Albert Hunt. The M. G. Billup residence at 3406 E. Broad Street is attributed to Rowlett. Edward A. Smith had an active career in Richmond as an architect and contractor between 1910 and 1920. Between 1911 and 1912, his company was listed as E. A. & H. C. Smith, which is when he designed the dwelling at 416 North 32nd Street with T. C. Swann as the builder.[33] In 1908, Isaac W. Throckmorton was vice-president of the Mutual Insurance Company of Richmond and between 1908 and 1916 had an active architectural practice.[34] Throckmorton is the architect of record for two dwellings in the district – 503 North 31st Street and 501 North 32nd Street. The builders for these dwellings were H. E. Mills and R. A. Throckmorton. Peter J. White designed the U. S. Weather Bureau Building at 3201 E. Broad Street in 1909. White, a native of Albemarle County, Virginia had an active practice in Richmond, from 1871-1913, as an architect and contractor under the name of P. J. White & Son.[35]

Two large property owners in the district are listed as the architect, builder and owner for numerous projects in the district. Thirty-fifth Street north of P Street carried the name of L. H. Dickerson, a prominent landowner, for many years. Dickerson is listed as architect and builder on four permits issued in the Oakwood section of the district between 1910 and 1911. He also worked with builder C. C. Taylor. Samuel P. Cowardin (1862-1942) owned the majority of the land east of North 35th Street between Broad and R streets. For many years, R Street between Oakwood Avenue and North 38th was known as Cowardin Street. Samuel P. Cowardin was born in 1862, at Terrace Springs in Barton Heights, now a Northside Richmond neighborhood. His father, William L. Cowardin, was the president of the Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company and a leader in the insurance business. Samuel left Richmond for a period to attend school, receiving a degree in Civil Engineering from the University of Virginia, and to work. He returned to Richmond in 1896 as Chief Engineer of the Richmond Traction Company. In 1899 he was promoted to Superintendent and was in charge of the construction of the Oakwood and Hollywood branch of the traction line. After 1902, when the Richmond Traction Company merged into the Virginia Passenger and Power Company, Cowardin listed his occupation as contractor. He is listed as the architect, builder and owner on seventeen building permits issued between 1907 and 1911, which included his personal residence at 901 North 36th Street. A Richmond newspaper article, ca. 1904, gives the following description of Mr. Cowardin and his endeavors:

> "…passage by the City Council last week of an ordinance …opening up 34th Street … will bring into the market a most beautiful piece of property .. now known as the 'Cowardin District.' The district is named for Mr. Samuel Cowardin, a gentleman who, for the past eight years, in a quiet but very steady way, has been active in bringing the East End to public notice. At his own expense he has laid off streets, planted trees and built houses. He has erected something like a hundred houses, which have been rented to people of small means. Mr. Cowardin is an expert civil engineer and a believer in Richmond realty … he gave up a most lucrative governmental position to come to Richmond from Washington and develop the East End. For eight years he has been plugging away on his own ideas, and now he is the mainstay of something of a town of his own."[36]

The Fulton Brick Works is one of two manufacturing companies listed on building permits as the architect, builder and owner. In 1907, the Fulton Brick Works built the dwelling at 620 North 32nd Street. The other company, Montague Manufacturing Company, is listed on building permits for five frame bungalows at 801-809 Chimborazo Boulevard in 1926 and for the Linwood C. Powers residence at 616 North 35th Street in 1929. Montague Manufacturing Company was located at the corner of 9th and Arch streets, and listed in period directories as the makers of "sash, blinds, doors, dressed lumber, mouldings, stairwork and mantels."

The following architects and builders were listed on permits but little else was learned about them. The most prolific of these was John T. J. Melton, who was listed as both architect and builder on over eighteen permits. Architects requiring further research are: George C. Cohen, H. T. Hanes, J. D. Tyler, George B. Jones, Jr., J. W. Clary, Roscoe C. McGiffin, C. W. Nicholson, Richmond Blue Print, and H. H. Wright. Builders for whom little information was discovered include: Bialkowski Brothers, F. H. Boatwright, J. Gerhard Boehling, R. D. Bowles, Gebberd Bucher, James Carr, J. E. Collins, Davis Brothers, Walter T. Davis, George A. Dietrick, Walter Douglas, George W. Ellis, Jr., Allen B. Ferguson, James H. Flippin, James H. Goddin, James M. Graves, S. H. Hawes and Company, William W. Hope, J. H. Moran, Rudd and Ferguson, Spicer and Atkinson, and John R. Tedford.

Boundary Justification

The above described boundaries were established to capture the highest number of contributing properties with similar development periods and architectural character. The north and south boundaries were established by three large landscape features – Chimborazo Park to the south and Oakwood and Evergreen cemeteries to the north. The eastern boundary is defined by rugged terrain and undeveloped land, the majority of which is occupied by the City Landfill. The western boundary was established by the existing St. John's Church Historic District, the Church Hill North Historic District and the George Mason Redevelopment area.
