A.G. Pless, Jr. House
Galax, Virginia

NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

Summary

The A.G. Pless, Jr., House is a single-family residence located on old U.S. 58 (now Glendale Road) in the eastern section of the City of Galax, Virginia. It is a two-story wood frame building built in the Colonial Revival Style and is a little over 3,000 square feet in size. It is situated on a lot that is approximately 1 acre in size and that is terraced on the east side and north side. An English garden with a circular drive is located on the front and southwest side of the house. The building exhibits all of the characteristics of the Colonial Revival style of the early part of the twentieth century, and its design was clearly influenced by house precedents in Colonial Williamsburg.

1. A.G. Pless, Jr. House, 1939. Contributing building
2. Detached Garage, 1941. Contributing building

Exterior

The A. G. Pless, Jr., House is a gable-ended two-story building with a rear two-story wing that comes off the center of the building; there is a one-story clapboard wing on the west side of the building and a one-story lean porch with a shed roof on the east side of the building. Its front façade, which faces south, is comprised of three bays; the center bay has a one-story porch that covers the front door and that has square posts with ogee molding capitals. There are two flanking chimneys on either gable end. All of the windows on the building are double-hung sash windows that have a six-over-nine lite configuration. The front door is a six-panel door that is flanked by sidelights over raised panels.

The one-story sun porch has low wood-framed jack arches. There are four bays on the east side and two bays on the north and south side of the porch, and two double-hung sash windows are situated in each bay on the east side; a patio door is located on the south side. The roof has a 10 to 12 pitch and is covered with asbestos shingles. Only the south/front façade windows have wood-louvered shutters with wrought iron hardware. A two-car garage on the west side of the building is connected to the main building by an open-air breezeway that has low jack arches similar to the east porch. The garage is also wood frame and gable ended and is similar in detailing to the main house; off of the car bays is a small business office with a small bathroom.

The exterior is carefully detailed in the Colonial Revival style: the heart pine clapboard is beaded, and the window and door casings have backbanded moldings. The house has box cornices that have beaded frieze boards, carved modillion blocks, simple rakes, and copper ogee built-in gutters. The box cornices return on themselves at all of the gable ends of the house.

Interior

The layout of the interior of the house is comprised of a center hall which is flanked by a living room on the east side and a dining room on the west side. A straight-run stairway is located on the east side of the center hall; it has simple turned pickets, turned newels, and raised paneled painted wainscoting. A den is at the end of the north side of the center hall. A stairway below the main stairway leads one down to the basement, which has a finished pine-paneled game room and a large mechanical room. The basement's structural walls are all poured-in-place concrete.

All of the ceilings on the first floor are 9 feet tall. Both the living room and the dining room have deep plaster cornices with large cyma recta crown mouldings and rakes. The living room mantle has raised panels, fluted triglyphs, and fluted pilasters. The living room and the dining room also have raised paneled wainscoting, similar to the center hall. Adjacent to the dining room on the north side is a small butler's pantry/ office, which leads into the kitchen.

The second floor has three bedrooms and a bathroom over the front door. The master bedroom has plaster cornices similar to the living room and the dining room, and the fireplace has a similar treatment to the living room. The second floor also has 9-foot-tall ceilings; all of the rooms in the house have 2 ½"-wide red oak strip floors, as well as plaster walls and ceilings.

The A.G. Pless, Jr., House exhibits the expert design of the noted Winston-Salem, North Carolina, architect William Roy Wallace. Wallace is known for his outstanding Colonial Revival residential designs in the North Carolina Piedmont area and in southwestern and southern Virginia in the first half of the twentieth century.

NARRATIVE STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Summary

The A.G. Pless, Jr., House, located near the eastern city limits of Galax, Virginia, along old U.S. 58 (now Glendale Road) is an outstanding example of Colonial Revival residential architecture that was prevalent throughout Virginia in the first half of the twentieth century. Its high level of architectural detailing and use of high-grade materials make it an important example of the early work of the noted architect William Roy Wallace of Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

Applicable Criteria

The A.G. Pless, Jr., House is an intricately designed Colonial Revival residence built in 1939 in the City of Galax, Virginia. The house was designed by Winston-Salem, North Carolina, architect William Roy Wallace for local businessman and civic leader, Asbury Glenn Pless, Jr.¹ With its elaborate exterior colonial detailing, its interior plaster mouldings, and picturesque landscape features, the A.G. Pless, Jr., House is an outstanding surviving example of Wallace's more modest residential designs and should be considered for eligibility for the National Register and Virginia Landmark Register under Criteria C for its architectural design.

Acknowledgments

The author wishes to acknowledge the following people for assistance in the preparation of this nomination. Foremost among these people are the owners of the property, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Galyean, who provided the architectural drawings. The author also wishes to thank Mr. John Pless for providing personal insights into the history of the property and the lives of the original owners, Mr. and Mrs. Asbury Glenn Pless, Jr., as well as Mrs. Rita Edwards, Curator of the Jeff Mathews Museum in Galax. Finally, the author wishes to acknowledge Dr. John R. Kern and Mr. Mike Pulice of the Roanoke Regional Preservation Office of the Virginia Department of Historic Resources for their assistance on this project.

Historic Context

Asbury Glenn Pless, Jr., was born in Grayson County, Virginia, in 1907. Pless lived in the young town of Galax until 1916, when his family moved to Daytona Beach, Florida; here he graduated from Seabreeze High School. He would later attend the University of Florida, where he lettered in football, baseball, and track. Upon graduating from the University of Florida, Pless began a career in professional baseball, playing for several minor league baseball teams. His career ended after he lost his left hand in an automobile accident. He returned to Galax and worked as a laborer; later he became the head football coach for Galax High School. In 1936 he married Ms. KenEtta Fulton of Bridle Creek, Virginia, and started an appliance business in downtown Galax. They had two children.²

By 1939, despite the Great Depression, the Pless Appliance and Furniture Store had prospered and had enabled the Pless family to build a new house on the outskirts of Galax. They engaged the services of architect William Roy Wallace to design the house.³ Prior to moving to Winston-Salem, Wallace had worked in the office of noted Philadelphia architect Charles Barton Keen from 1909 to 1927. Wallace accompanied Keen to Winston-Salem in 1927 after the completion of Keen's Reynolds House for tobacco magnet R. J. Reynolds. He established his own practice in 1928 in association with Harold Macklin. Wallace became a registered architect in Virginia in 1937. Other residential designs of note by him in Virginia include the Addison Schoolfield House in Pittsylvania County and Eltham Manor in Henry County, built for William McKinley Bassett. All of them were built at about the same time as the A.G. Pless, Jr., House.⁴

During the 1940s Pless served on the Galax City Council and was instrumental in leading efforts to persuade the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to implement flood control along Chestnut Creek in Galax after the flood of 1941. His business grew and expanded to the neighboring towns of Fries, Wytheville, Pulaski, and Radford. He retired in 1971 and helped form the Jeff Mathews Museum, which focuses on the history of Galax and the Twin County region. Pless died in 1995.⁵

Ms. KenEtta Pless lived in the house until she died in 2000.⁶ The house was purchased later that year by Jack and Lynda Galyean, who have begun restoring the house and updating its mechanical and electrical systems.⁷ The A.G. Pless, Jr., House retains all of its architectural and landscape elements as well as its site context along old U.S. 58, now known as Glendale Road.
