Summary Paragraph

The Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District was originally listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register and the National Register of Historic Places in 2005, at which time it included 164 contributing resources on approximately 103 acres. The proposed 2017 Boundary Increase for the Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District focuses on the former P. Bradley & Sons Foundry and its associated buildings. The boundary increase area includes five contributing buildings, some with multiple sections and additions. This property contributes to the existing district's local significance under Criterion A in the areas of Commerce, Community Planning and Development, and Industry. The added property expands the district's industrial significance to include an important resource associated with Harrisonburg's early industrial development and its buildings are among the oldest surviving examples of this type of industry in Harrisonburg. Overall the boundary increase area retains a high level of integrity of location, setting, design, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association; alterations to the industrial complex are related to evolving industrial process and changing commercial uses, and thus are not considered to have eroded its integrity.

Narrative Description

The Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District currently encompasses properties that represent the historic commercial, institutional, industrial, and architectural development of the core of the city. By extending the boundaries of the Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District to include the P. Bradley & Sons Foundry, the district will more fully encompass the industrial history of downtown Harrisonburg as well as include one of the oldest and longest-lived companies in the city.

The boundary increase area includes 5 buildings associated with the P. Bradley & Sons Foundry during its time of operation at this location from 1867-1963. In the descriptions below, the buildings have been divided into sections to better illustrate the development history of the site (see Site Plan/ Sketch Map). The area of the foundry is located along Old South High Street with buildings situated on the east and west sides of the street. The majority of the buildings are located on the west side of Old South High Street, while two buildings, Buildings D and E, are located on the east side. Buildings A, D, and E include what appear to be the original fabric of the P. Bradley & Sons Foundry and Plow Works business at this location. The majority of the buildings and additions are brick construction with standing-seam metal gable roofs.

Building A (Contributing)

Building A consists of several different building sections, some of which were separate buildings initially. Building A comprises the bulk of the plant and contains most of the earliest sections built on the property, including the foundry proper, the machine shop, the cupola furnace, the pig iron shed, and the warehouse. Sections A-1 and A-2 were built in 1867 and are part of the original foundry after the business moved from its previous location on Bruce Street. Section A-3 was constructed sometime between 1867 and 1877, but it is more likely part of the original construction in 1867. Section A-4 was added onto the south side of Section A-3 sometime between 1897 and 1902. In 1913, Section A-2 was enlarged with the addition of Section A-5. That same year the cupola furnace, Section A-6, was added onto the west side of Section A-5.

Sections A-7, A-8, and A-9 are non-historic, as they were added after the period of significance and after the western portion of the property was sold and Howard A. Spangler Co. moved into the building in 1963. However, these sections were constructed as infill between the existing sections of the building and thus unified all the sections into one large building. The roof sections overlap with the existing fabric of Sections A-1, A-2, A-3, and A-4. Section A-7 was added between Sections A-1 and A-4 sometime between 1989 and 1994. Sections A-8 and A-9 were added sometime between 1994 and 2000 onto the north side of Section A-7 between Sections A-2 and A-3.

This two-story building with its multiple-story additions primarily has brick walls, side-gable standing-seam metal roofs, and segmentally-arched windows with wooden, double-hung sash featuring nine-over-nine, six-over-six, two-over-two, and four-over-four light configurations. Foundations are a mix of continuous brick, concrete, and stone.

Section A-1 (Historic)

Section A-1 is two-stories and five-bays wide with a brick foundation. It has seven-course common bond brick walls, a side-gable standing-seam metal roof, and segmentally arched windows with double-hung, nine-over-nine, and six-over-six wooden sash.

Section A-2 and A-5 (Historic)

Sections A-2 and A-5 include one long, one-story, rectangular brick section with a central clerestory extending from the east elevation to the gable end of Section A-1. What were likely originally windows on the north and south sides of the clerestory, used for light and ventilation, have been covered with siding and what appear to be translucent panels in the center. The roof of the clerestory and side aisles of the two sections are standing-seam metal.

Section A-2 is four bays wide with a brick foundation and six-course common bond brick walls. The segmentally arched windows have four-over-four, double-hung, wooden sash with large exterior metal screens.

Section A-5 is six bays wide with a coursed, rubble stone foundation and six-course common bond brick walls. Openings include segmentally arched four-over-four, double-hung, wooden sash windows with large exterior metal screens, and a segmentally arched door opening with a batten door and transom window.

Section A-3 (Historic)

Section A-3 is one-story and five-bays wide with a poured concrete foundation. It has six-course common bond brick walls, a side-gable standing-seam metal roof, and both segmentally arched, double-hung, two-over-two, and two-light fixed, wooden sash windows.

Section A-4 (Historic)

This section is one-story and four bays wide with a brick foundation. It has six-course common bond brick walls, a side-gable standing-seam metal roof, and segmentally arched two-over-two, double-hung, and two-light fixed, wooden sash windows, and batten door openings.

Section A-6 (Historic)

Section A-6 is a two-story, two-bay, front-gabled brick addition with a two-story, one-bay corrugated metal shed extension on the west side. It has a metal cupola that is part of the furnace, and the gable and shed roof are standing-seam metal. There is a batten door on the north elevation and three window openings that are missing the sash and frames.

Section A-7, A-8, and A-9 (Non-historic)

These sections are non-historic fabric that have been added in between the historic fabric of Building A. Each has a poured concrete foundation, a shed or sloping standing-seam metal roof, and German vinyl siding. Section A-7 has two one-over-one metal-framed windows, and a vinyl door and garage door opening on the west elevation. Section A-9 has a loading dock opening on the north elevation, and an additional vinyl door opening on the east elevation.

Building B (Contributing)

Like Building A, Building B consists of several different sections. It is located on the southern edge of the site, close to Building A. The first section, B-1, was constructed sometime between 1918 and 1924. Section B-2 was added onto the west side of Section B-1 sometime between 1918 and 1924. Section B-3 was constructed initially as a separate building, north of Section B-1 sometime between 1945 and the 1960s. Later Section B-3 was connected to Sections B-1 and B-3 via a small cinderblock passageway. Section B-4 was added onto the east side of Section B-1 sometime in the late twentieth century; the exact date is unknown.

This one-story building and its one-story additions have brick and concrete block walls, as well as vinyl siding. The roofs are primarily front-gable standing-seam metal roofs, but there is also a front-gable asphalt shingle roof, a stepped brick parapet, and a stepped concrete block parapet. Windows have a mix of double-hung, six-over-six, and six-light fixed wooden sash and two-over-two and two-light fixed metal-framed sash. Foundations are poured concrete and concrete block.

Section B-1 (Historic)

The first to be constructed, this section is a one-story, eight-bay, rectangular edifice with a poured concrete foundation and six-course common bond brick walls. It has what is now a side-gable standing-seam metal roof with a stepped brick parapet on the south side. Windows have six-over-six double-hung and six-light fixed wooden sash.

Section B-2 (Historic)

Section B-2 is a one-story, four-bay, rectangular addition with a poured concrete foundation and replacement German vinyl siding. It has a side-gable standing-seam metal roof. Windows have six-over-six double-hung and six-light fixed wood sash with replacement vinyl exterior casing.

Section B-3 (Historic)

This section is a one-story, seven-bay, rectangular addition with a large aggregate concrete foundation and concrete block walls. It has a side-gable standing-seam metal roof with stepped concrete block parapets at each end. Windows have metal-framed two-over-two and two-light fixed windows. Other major openings include a large service window on the south elevation, and a garage door on the north end of the east elevation. This section is connected to Section B-2 by a small concrete block passageway.

Section B-4 (Non-historic)

Section B-4 is a one-story, one-bay, rectangular addition with a concrete foundation and German vinyl siding. It has a side-gable asphalt shingle roof, a single two-over-two window, an octagonal louvered vent in the gable, and a modern six-paneled door.

Building C (Contributing)

Building C, which was primarily used for storage, consists of two small sections on the northwestern side of the property. Section C-1 was constructed between 1897 and 1902, and Section C-2 was added onto the north elevation between 1930 and 1945.

This small, one-story, one-bay, building, and its one addition, has a brick foundation and brick walls. The roof is a side-sloping shed, standing-seam metal roof with exposed rafter ends. There are no windows.

Section C-1 (Historic)

Beyond the overall characteristics, Section C-1 has seven-course common bond brick walls and a segmentally arched wood opening with a batten door.

Section C-2 (Historic)

The Section C-2 addition is wider than Section C-1 and has a seven-course common brick bond with Flemish headers.

Buildings D and E (Contributing)

Today, Buildings D and E are located across the road from the main portion of the old P. Bradley & Sons foundry property on the west side of Old South High Street. These two buildings are thought to be part of the original P. Bradley & Sons foundry property. They were constructed sometime between 1867 and 1877, but were likely part of the original construction in 1867. They remained as part of the plow works portion of the remaining P. Bradley & Sons business after the closure of the foundry and sale of the property across the road in 1963. Today, these buildings are functionally separate from the property containing Buildings A, B, and C, as they are under different ownership.

Building D is one-story and has a brick foundation, six-course common bond brick walls, and a side-gable standing-seam metal roof. Windows are primarily segmentally arched, with six-light, double-hung sash with a storm window, upper screen, and a plywood replacement on the lower sash. Other windows have one-over-one double-hung wooden sash.

Building E is one-story, with a brick foundation, primarily six-course common bond brick walls, and a side-gable standing-seam metal roof. Early twentieth-century pressed tin, with a brick coursing pattern, covers the walls of an early storage section of the wood shop. Windows along the front have six-light double-hung sash with a storm window, upper screen, and a plywood replacement on the lower sash. Other windows have six-over-six double-hung, wooden sash.

Collectively, the resources within the boundary increase area are in keeping with the historic functions and architectural character of the Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District as it continued to serve as a regional commercial, institutional, and industrial center through the mid-20th century.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District 2017 Boundary Increase includes five contributing buildings, some with multiple sections and additions, that were historically associated with the P. Bradley & Sons Foundry. This property contributes to the existing district's local significance under Criterion A in the areas of Commerce, Community Planning and Development, and Industry. The added property expands the district's industrial significance to include an important resource associated with Harrisonburg's early industrial development and its buildings are among the oldest surviving examples of this type of industry in Harrisonburg. The period of significance for the boundary increase area is 1856-1963, encompassing the duration of the foundry's industrial operations at the South High Street location.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The existing Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District is significant under Criterion A, in the area of Community Planning and Development for its associations with the physical, institutional, and economic development of the City of Harrisonburg, and is significant in the area of Commerce due to the historic downtown business core that has served as a regional marketplace since the late 18th century. The district's nomination states that downtown Harrisonburg also once had a sizeable manufacturing sector, and that most of the industrial buildings and warehouses associated with it date largely to the first half of the twentieth century.

The P. Bradley & Sons Foundry property at South High Street contributes to the existing district's significance under Criterion A in the areas of Commerce, Community Planning & Development, and Industry. The boundary increase area expands the district's industrial significance history to include an industrial complex that is illustrative of Harrisonburg's late-9th century industrial development. The foundry buildings also are significant as one of the oldest surviving examples of this type of industry in Harrisonburg.

Additionally, the boundary increase area is associated with the original district's significance under Criterion C in the area of Architecture. Much of the historic fabric from the time of P. Bradley & Co.'s (later P. Bradley & Son's) foundry business remains extant. Although there have been several changes to the physical plant and site, as well as numerous additions, the buildings associated with the foundry retain their integrity and the property as a whole is illustrative of the changing industrial process that occurred here from the late 19th century through the early 1960s. The late 19th century and early 20th century resources are examples of the Commercial style as it was applied to industrial concerns during this period. Character-defining features include the horizontal massing, numerous window openings, and gabled monitor roof that were designed to flood interior spaces with natural light. Minimal architectural detailing, notably the segmental-arched window and door openings, plain frieze boards, and returned eaves, are characteristic of the Commercial style as applied to industrial buildings. Interiors of industrial buildings from this era were dictated by means of production and machinery necessary for manufacturing rather than aesthetic considerations.<sup>1</sup> As time progressed, architectural design of industrial buildings became increasingly utilitarian, often with minimal attempts to include stylistic references. By the end of World War II, industrial buildings often were virtually featureless boxes, and this trend is evident at the foundry complex as well. Overall, the former foundry's architectural value contributes to that of the existing Harrisonburg Downtown Historic District as it complements the existing district's architectural character and variegated resource types.

Historical Background

Philo Bradley established the Bradley foundry in 1856 when he purchased a small foundry from his brother, Nelson Bradley.<sup>2</sup> It was located on Bruce Street, at one time outside the city limits, on the old "Brewery" lot.<sup>3</sup> There used to be a spring on the site, from which they used to get water for the plant. After their casting room had been flooded several times by nearby Black's Run, the site was abandoned.<sup>4</sup>

In 1867 the foundry was moved from lower ground to its present site on the hill by what was once Warm Springs Turnpike, and is now known as Old South High Street.<sup>5</sup> An 1867 advertisement of P. Bradley & Co stated that "The Harrisonburg Iron Foundry is now in Full and Successful Operation,"<sup>6</sup> and that products included castings of every description, patterns for Mill Gearing, and plows of several different sizes that could be purchased by either cash, country produce, or time – to responsible customers.<sup>7</sup> Philo Bradley took on a business partner, Joshua Wilton, and named the company P. Bradley & Co. In the year following their opening at the new location along Old South High Street, P. Bradley & Co. sold more than 700 ploughs of their own pattern and had to refuse orders for more.<sup>8</sup> They operated the company together until 1877 when

Philo Bradley bought Mr. Wilton's portion of the business.<sup>9</sup> After that, Philo Bradley operated the foundry on his own with the exception of help from his two sons who were brought into the business.<sup>10</sup>

Philo Bradley's sons became increasingly involved in the business since 1878<sup>11</sup>, and in 1900, Philo the name of the business was changed to P. Bradley & Sons.<sup>12</sup> Philo Bradley died in 1908 leaving the firm to the sole operation of his sons. In 1918 the firm was incorporated<sup>13</sup> and Philo's son, Schulyer Bradley, was made president of the company.<sup>14</sup> Under Schuyler's leadership, the company became one of the leading and most successful foundries in the country with some of the firm's products known throughout the United States.<sup>15</sup>

In 1937, the firm celebrated 81 years of operation, and at this time was operated by Schuyler Bradley and his two sons, B. L. Bradley and S. B. Bradley. The products at the time were still high quality and consisted mainly of plow goods and general foundry work. By this time, the company's product reach extended throughout most of Virginia, as well as Maryland and Pennsylvania.<sup>16</sup>

Into the late 1940s, the foundry continued to have such a high volume of orders that it was a struggle to keep up with them. However, with the shift to the all-too-powerful tractor, casting ceased in 1961, after 106 years of pouring cast-iron plowshares.

Sometime in 1963, the portion of the property located on the north side of Old South High Street, which includes the bulk of the foundry buildings and that of the P. Bradley & Sons business, was sold. Howard A. Spangler Co., a wholesale distributor, moved into the foundry buildings in 1963.<sup>17</sup> At this time, P. Bradley & Sons continued the plow works portion of their business in the two remaining buildings on the south side of Old South High Street. In 1980 they advertised

In 1996 a businessman named Maynard A. Michael bought the remaining plow works portion of the P.
