SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

Greenlawn Memorial Park is a 50 acre cemetery located at a point where two natural streams, Mill Dam Creek and Salters Creek come together. The cemetery has been in continuous operation as a cemetery, serving the Newport News and Hampton communities, since its development in 1888. The cemetery is irregular in shape measuring one half mile from the front to the back and 400 feet at its narrowest point and 1200 feet at its widest point from side to side. Near the entrance is a white, two-story caretaker house built in 1936 with wood siding, asphalt shingle roofing and a white picket fence. The cemetery has approximately five miles of drives and pathways of grass, stone, and pavement. There are approximately 20,000 burials in the cemetery divided into individual and family plots. The monuments marking the burial sites date from the 1850's to the present and consist of small tablets, curbinges, obelisks, columnar monuments and mausoleums. The grounds of the cemetery are covered in grass with numerous shrubbery, bushes and trees. At the center of the cemetery is a 25 foot obelisk erected in 1900 marking the mass grave of 163 confederate POW's. These POWs who died in the nearby Newport News POW camp between April 27, 1865 and July 5, 1865. At the foot of this monument is a granite ledger with the names, rank, state and unit of each soldier. Thirteen southern states are represented. The property is in good condition and has had very little alteration since its creation.

Entering the cemetery at its only entrance at the end of Parish Ave in Newport News, Virginia is a grand entrance structure with a set of two red brick columns on either side of the entrance road, one eight feet tall and one ten feet tall. Attached on the inside of the two ten foot columns are two black wrought iron swing gates that span the entrance road when closed. Sitting on top of the brick columns are decorative flower vases. Attached between the ten foot and the eight foot columns are decorative wrought iron gates which span a walkway when closed and wrought iron fencing on the outside of the eight foot columns. The first 500 feet of the main entrance drive is lined on either side with mature 12 to 15 foot crepe myrtle trees. The plan of the cemetery is irregular and strongly shaped by two natural streams, Mill Dam Creek and Salters Creek. The main avenue of the cemetery runs north within an elongated rectangular grid and terminates at a broad oval laid out perpendicular to the avenue. To the southwest of the main avenue, the cemetery extends in a less regular pattern as the grid dissolves into curving paths and circular drives through established plots and areas still undeveloped. The burial grounds are laid out in rectangular, oval and round sections. The rectangular and round sections are subdivided into individual family lots where the average lot contains six to ten burial spaces ranging from 12 feet by 20 feet to 20 feet by 20 feet. In these two sections, each family has erected on their lots upright granite memorials unique to that family's individual taste. Many have installed granite curbing so as to clearly distinguish one lot from the other. The pathways providing access to the individual family lots are generally 12 feet wide grass paths designed for walking but also wide enough for a vehicle if necessary. The pathways for the rectangular sections run parallel to the family lots and provide easy access. At the center of the round section is the Confederate POW memorial. Around the Confederate POW memorial are laid out two sets of rings containing family burial lots. Between the rings are grass pathways generally 12 feet wide also designed for walking but wide enough for a vehicle. The oval sections are designed for individual and two space lots. Granite memorials have been erected relative to the size of the lots. The pathways surrounding the oval sections are covered by stone and are designed for vehicles. A variety of shrubs and bushes have been planted by individual families on their lots. This gives the landscape a very informal appearance throughout the cemetery further enhancing the designers' plan of a rural setting. The entire length along the boundaries of the two creeks are heavily lined by several varieties of very mature broadleaf and needleleaf trees that appear unplanned. In addition to the shrubs, bushes and trees on the family lots, there are numerous large magnolia, fruit and hardwood trees distributed throughout the interior of the cemetery further adding to the rural landscape design.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Greenlawn Memorial Park is historically significant for its association with the Newport News POW camp. Greenlawn Memorial Park contains 163 Confederate soldiers that were reinterred there in 1900. In 1908, a monument was erected to honor these soldiers who died in the Newport News POW Camp, between April 27, 1865 and July 5, 1865. The camp was actually located at the end of 18th Street next to Camp Butler overlooking Hampton Roads.

Additionally, Greenlawn Memorial Park is significant for its 19th century style of landscape design which emerged in the 1850's and was in full use by the late 1800's. In 1888, the original developers selected a piece of property that was separated from the business and residential portions of the city making the cemetery site a rural setting. The designers of the cemetery skillfully used the style of the existing natural landscape of native trees and designed the drives and pathways to wind around and through the property. This informal picturesque design created the atmosphere of a public park. The idea was to create a space that was for the living as well as the dead. Greenlawn became a popular gathering place for families to picnic and socialize. The POW monument in the center of the cemetery is another example of the trend of 19th century cemeteries. It was common among the 19th century cemetery designers to have monuments erected memorializing prominent or historical figures as a centerpiece of the cemetery.

The victorious Union army had thousands of Confederate troops to parole and return to their homes throughout the South at the war's end. With Northern camps already filled to capacity with captured Confederates, Newport News POW camp was planned to hold and process 10,000-20,000 prisoners. The camp was quickly built on a site (east of present 18th Street and the CSX right of way and extending to the Waterfront) next to Camp Butler. Other facilities, including a hospital, were constructed. The 122nd US Colored Troops: Battery B, 2nd US Colored Light Artillery and the 1st US Colored Cavalry were assigned to guard the camp. Colonel J. Ham Davidson was camp commandant. The use of black soldiers to guard the Newport News POW camp led to several unfortunate incidents. In late April, two former Confederates were wounded by sentries, (one accidentally) which increased the friction between the guards and prisoners. Racial tensions compounded by fears of a prison escape came to a deadly explosion on the evening of May 7, 1865. Approximately ten prisoners approached the guard, Pvt. Harrison Woodson of the 122nd USCT, trying to sell him trinkets and taunting him about President Lincoln's death. One ex-confederate ignored Woodson's repeated commands to halt his steps onto the gallery where prisoners were forbidden to go after dark. The officer, Lt.

Harold, approached the scene and ordered the sentry while he was reloading his musket with double shot, "There is another man on the gallery now; why do you not use the bayonet on him?" Woodson leaped toward the prisoner, Pvt. Benjamin Hunt, thrusting his bayonet into the prisoner's back. "You have killed him dead," to which the black soldier replied, "Yes, by God! They buried us alive at Fort Pillow".

The Commissary-General of Prisoners ordered a court martial which indicated no wrong doing but he also issued new regulations to avoid reoccurrence of similar incidents. Union officials now realized the futility of imprisoning former Confederates until they were formally paroled and the Newport News POW camp never reached its anticipated capacity. By July it was empty. The camp never held more than 3,490 prisoners, of which 168 died during captivity and 12 escaped. The authorities deactivated the camp in August of 1865.

The economic development of Newport News Point by Collis P. Huntington resulted in the destruction of Camp Butler and the Newport News POW camp. Terminal expansion in the 1890's caused the removal of the bodies of the Confederate soldiers who had died in the compound. In June 1900, the members on the Magruder Camp No. 36 United Confederate Veterans, successfully petitioned the Greenlawn Cemetery directors to donate a plot in which to reinter these bodies. A privately funded monument was erected on the site that same year. In 1979, thanks to the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas P. Duncan, a tablet listing the names, ranks and home towns of those reinterred was installed at Greenlawn Cemetery. The Bethel Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy sponsored the dedication ceremony on Memorial Day, May 27, 1979.²

In the years following the War between the States (1861-1865), the American industrialist Collis P. Huntington purchased the C & O railroad in 1869. Coal was the chief business of the C & O railroad. Huntington recognized the potential of the natural port of Hampton Roads as a way to take advantage of the prosperous coastwise and overseas markets. By 1872, Huntington's representatives were quietly buying properties and acquiring right-of-ways between Newport News and Richmond. By 1880, work began on the laying of track between Newport News and Hampton. People poured into the area to work. In 1884, the Chesapeake Dry Dock and Construction Company was started. An industrial boom had begun. The population of Warwick County and Elizabeth City County had grown from a population of 12,947 in 1880 to 43,983 in 1900.³ The Old Dominion Land Company began buying up farms and lands to develop residential neighborhoods. In 1896, the City of Newport News was incorporated.

National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

Section number 8 Page 5

Realizing the needs of the growing community, Greenlawn Cemetery was developed by the Newport News Cemetery Company beginning February 14, 1888 when Newport News was in its infancy. The incorporators were T.H. Gordon, Louis Bremond, I. E. White, Theodore Livezey, E. Clayton, E.B. Smith, T. E. Morris and M. B. Crowell. By the terms of the charter, they were authorized to associate others with them, and Messrs. W. A. Post, Geo. B. West, Carter M. Braxton, W. B. Livezey, C. B. Nelms and W. J. Nelms were added as associates.

"In looking about for a location, attention was directed to what appeared to be a site planned by nature and peculiarly well adapted for this purpose - the choice site of the whole section of country. A point of land adjacent to the new town occupying an elevation and water courses surrounding the land guarantees perfect drainage. The proximity of the City makes it convenient for those who desire to visit the graves of their loved ones buried there. While convenient, it is, at the same time, separated from the business and residential portions of the City by natural water courses, and thus one's most sacred thoughts and meditations are undisturbed while visiting God's acre."⁴

In Newport News as with other new cities springing up through out the United States, the rural cemetery had displaced the family farm and church cemeteries which continued a trend that began in the 1850's.⁵

Characteristics found in Greenlawn Cemetery common to other mid 19th century cemeteries are that its designers freely used the elements of the increasingly popular suburban landscape in developing the look and atmosphere of the memorial park, the picturesque atmosphere, inefficient but aesthetically pleasing serpentine roadways, and economically impractical wide pathways and natural land reserves. In addition, the reinterment of the remains of heroes (such as the 163 confederate POW's reinterred from the Newport News POW camp) moved from church yards, family and town graveyards to the Mid 19th century cemetery were common. Such conditions reinforced the rural cemeteries claim of greater permanence.⁶

Greenlawn Cemetery, now Greenlawn Memorial Park, has been in continuous operation since it's founding in 1888. Currently there are approximately 150 new burials per year. The cemetery's connection with the War between the States and its close proximity to the site of the historic battle of the Iron Clads, The Monitor and The Merrimac, give tourists an opportunity to visit two sites that made an impact on local and national affairs, and the burial customs of our ancestors.
