DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Point of Fork Plantation is located on a wedge-shaped piece of land at the junction of the James and Rivanna Rivers. The plantation house is set on a ridge overlooking the bottom lands and the rivers. The front fields are crossed by the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad which is built on the towpath of the James River and Kanawha Canal. To the west of the house are broad lawns with fine trees. In the southwest corner of the yard are the outlines of formal terraced gardens.

The imposing two-story house is set on a high basement and has approximate ground dimensions of 40' X 50'. Covering the house is a shallow hipped roof from which project four interior end chimneys. The house's west or land front is sheltered by a large two-story tetrastyle portico with Greek Doric columns and no pediment. The portico serves to de-emphasize the asymmetry of the west facade which has two windows to the north of the entrance and one to the south. Surrounding the house, as well as the portico, is a Doric cornice with mutules and dentils. The river or east front has a small porch sheltering the entrance. The porch is supported on pairs of fluted Doric columns. Unlike the west front, the east front is symmetrical with two windows on either side of the entrance. Other notable exterior features include the rectangular white marble window sills and lintels, and the marble water table. Unornamented white plaster panels are employed between the first and second story windows on all but the west front. All four walls are laid in unusually fine Flemish bond brickwork with thinly tooled joints. The brickwork is in a good state of preservation.

Point of Fork's interior is divided into a central hall with pairs of rooms on either side. The most outstanding feature of the spacious first floor is the beautiful spiral stair which ascends in the southwest corner of the hall against a correspondingly curved wall. The hall is divided in the center by an elliptical arch supported by Doric pilasters with carved caps. The arch's architrave is ornamented with an intricately carved guilloche.

The first floor's north rooms were retrimmed in the early part of the present century. The woodwork around the wide opening between the rooms, as well as the mantels are in a comparatively heavy Neo-Classical Revival style, featuring bas-relief panels of classical figures. Aside from this trim, as well as some Corinthian pilasters in the north rooms, most of the remaining woodwork throughout the house is original. The house is well maintained and in a good state of preservation.

Two interesting early outbuildings survive on the grounds: a servants' house and an office. The servants' house is a two-story, five-bay brick structure in a poor state of repair. The brick office is temple form with a wooden facade in the form of a somewhat crude Doric portico in antis. Both buildings are unusual examples of their respective types.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The large Classical Revival mansion of Point of Fork plantation is one of two nearly identical houses erected in the 1820's by William Galt for his two great-nephews. Born in Ayshire, Scotland, Galt immigrated to Virginia in his early youth and settled in Richmond where he became a prosperous merchant. He became associated in business with his niece's husband, John Allan, foster-father of Edgar Allan Poe. His successful business ventures enabled him to acquire extensive landholdings in Fluvanna County where he established two plantations, Point of Fork and Glen Arvon.

Upon Galt's death in 1826, his Fluvanna plantations passed as he intended to his two great-nephews, William and James Galt. Glen Arvon went to William and Point of Fork went to James. Prior to his great-uncle's death James had been sent back to Scotland for schooling, (accompanied on this trip by Edgar Allan Poe.) Having been born and educated in Scotland, James Galt was considered by law to be a British subject. Therefore it was not until 1828, when he was admitted United States citizenship, that he was able to take title to Point of Fork.

Point of Fork derives its name from its situation at the junction of the James and Rivanna Rivers. The Point traditionally is the location of Rausawek, capitol of the Monocan Indian nation. Captain John Smith made an expedition up the James in 1607 and found two Monocan villages in what are now Chesterfield and Powhatan Counties. It is not known if he actually reached Rausawek, but he noted its location on his map. It is said that one of the Monocan chiefs is buried near the present gate to the property.

The point was of strategic importance during the Revolution. Established there was one of the Commonwealth's principal military installations which included a training ground, barracks, supply depot, and an important arsenal. The arsenal site has been placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

In March, 1865, Federal troops under General Philip Sheridan occupied the plantation and Sheridan set up headquarters in the house. The plantation as well as the surrounding area was plundered but the house and its contents were untouched. James Galt lost slaves, livestock and provisions. Much crop land and fencing was burned, and his slaves who were not carried off were robbed of their personal possessions. Galt was pardoned by President Johnson after the war, and was nominated to represent his district in the General Assembly. He served in the 1865/66 and 1866/67 sessions.

In addition to its historical associations, Point of Fork ranks among the major examples of plantation architecture in the upper James

The handsomely proportioned house has highly sophisticated architectural detailing, and illustrates the transition of the Adam style of the Federal period to the Greek Revival style. The large portico is one of the early uses of the Greek Doric order in Virginia. The house also exhibits unusually fine craftsmanship in its detailing. The very even Flemish bond brickwork is outstanding, and wood features such as the exterior Doric cornice and the spiral stair on the interior are exceptional.
