South Boston Historic Nomination Update and District
Boundary Increase

SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The South Boston Historic District was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1986. It consists of industrial, commercial, and residential building types dating from the mid-nineteenth century to the present. Generally, the downtown commercial area along the 100-400 blocks of South Main Street divides residential areas to the east and north from industrial areas to the southwest. In the existing district, the commercial buildings are typical two-part commercial block buildings varying in height from two to four stories. Residential blocks include 500-1800 North Main Street and the 1000-1200 blocks of Peach Avenue, and parts of Fenton, Jeffress, Ellyson, Traver, Shepherd, Irish, Grove, Hodges, Wilkerson, Barbour, Moore, Logan, Second, Third, and Sixth Streets. Architectural styles represented include Queen Anne, Italianate, Tudor Revival, Colonial Revival, Spanish Colonial Revival, and Craftsman. Industrial buildings include multi-story brick warehouses and prizeries associated with the tobacco industry. When listed in 1986, the district contained 432 contributing buildings, 3 contributing structures, and 72 non-contributing buildings. The original nomination's period of significance is ca. 1800 through 1936.

Two decades have passed since the district boundaries were established and a nomination update and boundary expansion is now necessary. As part of this resurvey effort, the period of significance and the areas of significance have been expanded to include buildings constructed up to 1958 and to include buildings significant for their associations with African American history. As a result, survey efforts in 2007 resulted in the identification of properties whose status should be changed from non-contributing to contributing. These buildings, including both residential and commercial uses, are interspersed among the above-mentioned streets and were reevaluated for their contributing status based on the expanded areas and period of significance. In addition, the boundary increase encompasses contiguous neighborhoods previously not included in the district. These neighborhoods were not included in the original nomination partially because of the age of the resources, but also because of the limited scope of the 1986 survey and nomination project. One such neighborhood lies east of the existing district, in the 600-900 blocks of Marshall Avenue in the vicinity of the C.H. Friend School (601 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0542). Other neighborhoods adjacent to the existing boundaries are significant in the town's African American history. Specifically, the 1900-2400 blocks of North Main Street and sections of Ragland, Mineral, and Johnston Streets and Watkins and Noblin Avenues are traditional African American neighborhoods. These neighborhoods continue to be occupied by African American residents. A fourth area included in the boundary increase contains the New Brick Warehouse (701 Jefferson Avenue, 130-0006-0596), which is reflective of South Boston's tobacco heritage, as well as a number of dwellings that were not previously surveyed.

The period of significance for the South Boston Historic District Nomination Update and Boundary Increase closes in the late 1950s, as tobacco, historically South Boston's economic base, became less and less significant in the town's industrial landscape. In the 1930s, Halifax County's economy was largely agricultural. After the 1950s, the tobacco industry gave way to textile mills and various manufacturing plants. Halifax County and South Boston populations dropped dramatically by 1960, after several decades of stasis. During the 1960s, commercial mainstays on Main Street moved outside of town. The traditional expansion of residential neighborhoods adjacent to the town's fringes was no longer the pattern of development.

In the South Boston Historic District Nomination Update and Boundary Increase, residences are one- or two-story, of brick or frame construction, and include vernacular forms from American Foursquare to gable-front-and-wing plans. Colonial Revival is the predominant style, though Craftsman bungalows and Queen Anne styles are represented as well. Also in the expansion areas are a Colonial Revival-style school, with ancillary buildings, and two churches (one contributing, the other non-contributing).

DETAILED DESCRIPTION

The Marshall Avenue neighborhood is anchored by the C.H. Friend School (601 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0542). Marshall Avenue lies east of the existing historic district. The buildings to be included in the expansion include the C. H. Friend School at the corner of Fenton Street, at the south end, and dwellings along Marshall Avenue. These are joined to the existing district by two cross streets, Lovelace and Irish. The school is a three-story building of brick construction in the Colonial Revival style. Completed in 1939, the school features a central, Corinthian-motif portico with a gable pediment and round columns with acanthus leaves at the capitals. Its plain entablature bears the school's name across the frieze, and the cornice and eaves of the pediment have modillions. In the center of the pediment is a nine-light window. Under the portico on the first story are three round-arched openings. The central arch holds the main entrance into the school, featuring single-panel, double doors capped by a fanlight. The flanking arches mimic this design, though they contain multi-light, Chicago windows with wood panels below and matching fanlights above. Atop the portico is a small cupola with engaged columns and a bell-shaped, metal roof. Three-story, lateral wings extend from each side of the main block of the school. These wings have multi-light, Chicago windows. The school has auxiliary buildings, as well as a baseball field and basketball court.

The neighborhood along Marshall Avenue north of the school represents the early twentieth century expansion of the town of South Boston. Dwellings from circa 1900-1915 include examples of central hall I-houses (e.g., 736 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0514) and gable-front-and-wing vernacular plans (e.g., 722 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0518), as well as American Foursquare (e.g., 725 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0536) and Dutch Colonial Revival (e.g., 731 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0534) designs. By the 1920s, Craftsman bungalows (e.g., 801 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0532) and Colonial Revival dwellings (e.g., 719 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0537) appear on Marshall Avenue; the latter style is the most predominant, continuing as a design trend into the 1950s.

The dwelling nearest the school and on the same (east) side of Marshall Avenue is the oldest in this boundary expansion neighborhood, dating to ca. 1890. This house, at 703 Marshall Avenue (130-0006-0541), is a one-story, Italianate-influenced dwelling. Of brick construction, the dwelling retains interior, brick chimneys, exposed rafter tails, Tuscan columns on a full-width porch, an original, single-light glass and three-panel wood door with a two-light transom, and original, multi-light-over-one, wood sash windows with brick segmental arches.

The remainder of the east side of the 700 block is characterized by Colonial Revival-influenced vernacular forms from ca. 1925, American Foursquare and Dutch Colonial Revival dwellings from 1915, and bungalows from the 1920s. At the north end of Marshall Avenue are larger houses on larger lots that date from the previous decade. The dwellings at 903 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0527, and 921 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0526, previously were oriented to their respective side streets. Their entrances shifted to face Marshall Avenue as the street became more populated. As they both were of grand scale, this re-orientation was accomplished without greatly compromising their original exteriors. Wraparound porches helped to facilitate the shift. Generally, the west side of Marshall Avenue became populated with houses more sporadically, with only three pre-1920 vernacular forms; this side of the street includes mostly post-World War II dwellings such as Cape Cod style houses (e.g., 726 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0517).

A second cohesive neighborhood included in this boundary expansion is along North Main Street, beginning in the 1900 block, where the existing district ends. In general, these houses are of vernacular form, influenced by Colonial Revival (e.g., 1919 North Main Street, 130-0006-0548), Italianate (e.g., 1931 North Main Street, 130-0006-0552), or Queen Anne (e.g., 1929 North Main Street, 130-0006-0551) styles. They date from ca. 1890 to the 1960s, with many of the dwellings constructed prior to 1930. This neighborhood drew rising middle class African Americans, including teachers and doctors.

The Ebenezer Christian Methodist Episcopal church at 2309 North Main Street (130-0006-0583), though non-contributing in its present form, dates to 1878. It was rebuilt in 1968, following a fire, and its original, five-course American bond brick foundation is still visible on the south elevation's basement level. The stretcher bond brick, gable-front Church has a vinyl-clad steeple, a partial-width, three bay entry porch, original (1968) wood-panel double doors, and Gothic arched windows. Though the current church building is non-contributing, the presence of the historic congregation reflects the development of the African American neighborhood along North Main Street.

The oldest dwelling is at 1931 North Main Street (130-0006-0552). This ca. 1892, two-story, Italianate-influenced dwelling is the oldest of several similar houses in the neighborhood and has a hipped roof of V-crimp metal, partial-width porch with hipped roof and milled, wood posts, brackets, and jigsaw railing, and original, vertical, two-over-two, wood sash windows. At 1923 North Main Street (130-0006-0549) is a ca. 1895, two-story, frame house with a cross gable, V-crimp metal roof and aluminum siding. Its original façade has been altered with a ca. 1950, one-story, concrete block addition featuring a picture window flanked by smaller windows.

Among the several modest, one-story bungalows (2021 North Main Street, 130-0006-0559, ca. 1920) and gable-front-and-wing dwellings (2023 North Main Street, 130-0006-0560, ca. 1956) are a few larger scale houses with distinctive details such as the ca. 1928, two-and-one-half-story Queen Anne at 1929 North Main Street (130-0006-0551) with a two-story, projecting, hexagonal bay, a two-and-one-half-story turret, and details including dentils and modillions; and the ca. 1920 two-story, Colonial Revival at 1919 North Main Street (130-0006-0548) with a brick exterior and a partial-width, one-story portico with paired Tuscan columns, single Tuscan pilasters, three-light sidelights, dentiled cornice, wood surround, and flat roof with wrought iron railing above.

This boundary expansion of North Main Street also contains three commercial buildings (two that are contributing). At 2013 North Main Street (130-0006-0557) is a ca. 1940 commercial building with the sign, "Monument Office." Built on a concrete block foundation, it has a storefront façade of display windows and a glass and metal door, and one-over-one, aluminum windows on the side elevations. Across the street at 2018 North Main Street (130-0006-0558) is a ca. 1955, two-story, three-bay, commercial building with an exterior of stretcher bond brick, a flat roof, and one-story entry porches with concrete floors and concrete, flat roofs supported by brick side walls. Each entrance has an original, wood door with three square lights next to a fixed, nine-light picture window. The third commercial building is the Jeffress Funeral Home (2000 North Main Street 130-0006-0581) a ca. 1965, one-story commercial building of concrete block and brick construction, with ca. 2005 wing.

A second African American neighborhood included in the boundary expansion is west of downtown South Boston, in the area of the 1890 Mizpah Presbyterian Church on Ragland Street, formerly called African Street. This neighborhood, in the vicinity of tobacco warehouses, developed as a working class, African American community whose residents were employed in the tobacco industry. Several open spaces exist where dwellings once were, evidenced by vacant, recently graded lots. However, the area still appears as a neighborhood of similar-aged dwellings of modest, vernacular form. The church itself is the neighborhood focal point. Its prominent gable front façade features a three-story, corner entrance tower, a three-part, Gothic arch window, and a gable field of alternating rows of diamond, square, and beveled-edge wood shingles. A side wing was added sometime between 1912 and 1918, and the tower's entrance was re-oriented from the front to the side with ca. 1970, metal double doors, concrete stoop, and wood ramp. Above each window and the three entrances are two-light transoms, within original Gothic arch frames.

Dwellings on Ragland Street are from the early-to-mid-twentieth century and are of vernacular form, such as the ca. 1915, two-story, side gabled house at 310 Ragland Street (130-0006-0600) with a ca. 1940 wing, and two one-story dwellings from ca. 1930 at 303 Ragland Street (130-0006-0598) and 301 Ragland Street (130-0006-0599) with concrete block foundations and synthetic siding. Most of the dwellings in the vicinity of the church are similar examples of modest forms with late twentieth century updates. Dwellings on Mineral and Johnston Streets and Noblin Avenue date from ca. 1910 to 1925; several have ca. 1990 replacement doors and windows. These dwellings would have been occupied by warehouse and/or prizery workers.

A small area that is almost enveloped by the existing district boundary line is in the area of the New Brick Warehouse at 701 Jefferson Avenue (130-0006-0596). This ca. 1930, two-story tobacco warehouse has a brick foundation, an exterior of six-course American bond brick, four loading dock bays with original, wood, sliding track doors, original six-over-six and eight-over-eight, wood sash windows and a stepped parapet. One dwelling at 801 Jefferson Avenue (130-0006-0614), and multiple dwellings on Randolph and Washington Avenues are included in this area. These are mostly mid-twentieth century houses in middle class neighborhoods. Most are of the Colonial Revival style (e.g., 803 Washington Avenue, 130-0006-0619).

INVENTORY

This project included two main components – the resurvey of the existing district and new survey of the expansion areas. This inventory is therefore broken up into updates to the original nomination and new survey in the expansion areas. Updates to the existing district include an inventory of resources that have been demolished since 1986, an inventory of newly constructed buildings in the district, and an inventory that includes all previously non-contributing resources, all of which were resurveyed as part of this project. The second half of this inventory includes all of the resources in the expansion areas, organized alphabetically by street name.

Updates to the original district nomination

New Construction within the original Historic District boundaries

606 Broad Street 130-0006-0625

This large boxy glass and concrete Bank of America building has been constructed since 1986. The building is two stories tall with a concrete frame and glass curtain walls. A concrete awning marks the main entrance on the north elevation. The building faces northeast on an irregularly shaped lot on the southwest side of Broad Street just north of its intersection with N. Main Street. Shrubs, flowers, and ornamental trees occupy planting beds around the foundation of the building and an irregularly shaped lawn occupies the narrow six-foot setback between the building and the public sidewalk.

Commercial building NC

1607 North Main Street 130-0006-0626

This large, two-story frame house has a side gabled roof with several front gabled bays and is in the neo-traditional style typical for the late 20th and early 21st centuries. It has vinyl siding, vinyl windows, and an asphalt shingle roof. It has a deeper setback than its historic neighbors. It was constructed in the 1990s or early 2000s and took the place of an historic dwelling.

Single dwelling NC

This two-story brick building for the Carter Bank and Trust takes the place of two historic buildings listed above – 214-216 S. Main and 218 S. Main. It has borrowed design elements from its historic neighbors including segmentally arched windows and a parapeted flat roof. It was probably constructed in the 1990's or 2000's. The building is located in the historic commercial corridor and the front is flush with the public sidewalk. A large lawn is located to the north where three historic commercial buildings have been demolished. The south elevation is adjacent to the historic building at 206 S. Main Street.

Commercial building NC

This one-story, four-bay, ranch-style house has a side gabled roof and was built sometime after 1986. The house has vinyl siding and vinyl windows. A partial width engaged front porch has turned posts and square balusters. A one-story, one-room wing projects from the south side elevation and has two windows and a door on the front elevation. There are no secondary resources associated with this property. The houses faces east on the west side of Peach Avenue at its intersection with Hughes Street. The level lot includes several crape myrtle trees and some mature shrubs. A stand of large mature hardwoods are located behind the house. The perimeter of the lot is lined with a vinyl fence.

Resources recorded as Non-Contributing in the original nomination, some now Contributing

In the following inventory all resources have been considered either contributing or non-contributing based upon the areas of significance as listed under Criteria A and C for Industry, Ethnic History (African American) and Architecture, and based upon the period of significance from 1800 through 1958. The closing date for the period of significance was previously 1936. The revised closing date recognizes the continued pattern of residential development and the importance of the tobacco industry through the 1930s, 1940s and 1950s in areas immediately adjacent to the historic core. All non-contributing resources have been so noted for being either constructed after 1958 or because they have no integrity left to represent the period and areas of significance. In determining contributing status for resources constructed within the period of significance, primary importance was placed on the retention of their historic form and massing, and integrity of materials was of less importance.

Single dwelling C

This one-story ranch-style house was surveyed in 1986 as constructed in the 1940s but it has been substantially altered since the original survey and the original construction date is difficult to determine. The frame house has a four bay façade and a side gabled roof covered with asphalt shingles. The house is clad in vinyl siding and all of the windows are vinyl replacements that appear to be smaller than the original window openings. An aluminum hood shelters the concrete stoop in front of the main entrance. Applied paneled shutters flank the windows and a single interior chimney is located at the ridge of the roof. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this house. The level lot is open in the front with young foundation plantings along the front elevation and larger shrubs along the west side elevation. Mature trees are located to the rear of the lot. A partially graveled parking area is located next to the house on the west side and a straight concrete walkway leads from the public sidewalk to the front stoop.

Single dwelling NC

This one-story, four-bay ranch-style house probably dates to the 1960s or 1970s. It has a stretcher bond brick exterior and a side gabled roof covered with asphalt shingles. Paired two-over-two (horizontal) windows are flanked by applied, louvered shutters. A concrete stoop with a wooden railing provides access to the front entrance. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces north on the south side of Hodges Street. The level lot is dominated by a mature hardwood tree in the front yard and planting beds with mature shrubs line the foundation along the front elevation. A straight concrete walkway leads from the public sidewalk to the front stoop.

Single dwelling NC

1312 Irish Street 130-0006-0447

Ca. 1945, one-story, four-bay Colonial Revival/Ranch, side gable roof of asphalt shingles, brick foundation, stretcher bond brick exterior, central, interior, brick chimney, entry vestibule with shed roof, brick stoop, wrought iron railing, original, two-light, four-panel glass and wood door with wood surround of pilasters and cornice, projecting, gable front bay with bay window, six-over-six and eight-over-eight, wood sash, screened porch with side gable roof; trees, shrubbery, slate path.

Single dwelling C

This one-story, ranch-style house was probably built in the 1960s. The façade has five asymmetrical bays. Exterior cladding is a mixture of stretcher bond brick and coursed ashlar with some siding on side elevations. The hipped roof is covered with asphalt shingles and has wide overhanging eaves. A prominent and massive ashlar chimney is located on the façade. The house has a variety of window types including casements and a large picture window. There is no front porch but a concrete stoop provides access to the main entrance. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces north on the south side of Irish Street. The largely open yard slopes up from the street and is characterized by large, mature shrubs around the foundation. A straight concrete walkway leads from the street to the front stoop.

This one-and-a-half-story brick cottage shows Tudor influences in the prominent front chimney and steeply pitched roof. The side gabled roof has a projecting cross gabled bay on the façade and two gabled dormers. The façade is four bays wide and has an exterior tapered brick chimney between two of the bays. The front entrance features sidelights and is sheltered by a one-bay entry porch with paired square posts, scroll brackets, and a catslide roof. The house is built of stretcher bond brick, windows are six-over-six double hung wood sash, and the roof is covered with architectural asphalt shingles, perhaps intended to resemble slate. There are no visible secondary resources associated with the property. The house faces south on the north side of Irish Street. The yard slopes uphill from the street and is dominated by a very large mature hardwood tree in front of the house. Much of the front yard beneath this tree is covered with English ivy and various mature shrubs and border plants are located around the foundation of the house. A curving slate path leads from the public sidewalk to the front porch.

This one-and-a-half-story brick cottage shows Tudor Revival stylistic influences. The side gabled roof features a prominent steeply pitched cross gabled bay holding the arched central entry. A large partially exterior brick chimney is located where the cross gable meets the main block of the house. The façade is three bays wide and features paired six-over-six (vinyl) windows flanking the central cross gabled bay. The house is mostly stretcher bond brick with a soldier course at the water table and soldier course window lintels and rowlock brick sills. The central cross gabled bay and the chimney also features random rusticated stone work interspersed with the brick. The main entrance consists of a full-arched wood door with three small vertical lights and a small, square, diamond paned window to one side. A brick and concrete stoop with a black metal railing provides access to the front door. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces south on the north side of Irish Street. The level lot is shaded by several large mature hardwoods including one right in front of the house. Foundation plantings surround the house and a straight slate walkway leads from the street to the front stoop.

Single dwelling C

1600 Irish Street 130-0006-0454 (Address was 1610 Irish in the original survey and inventory)

This two-story, three-bay Colonial Revival style house was probably constructed in the 1960's. The brick (stretcher bond) house is fairly plain and boxy with a side gabled roof and a symmetrical façade. The centrally located main entrance features a Colonial Revival-style door surround with reeded pilasters and a pediment and is accessed by a brick stoop with a metal railing. Windows are eight-over-eight double-hung wood sash and are flanked by applied louvered shutters. An exterior brick end chimney is located on the west side elevation. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces south on the north side of Irish Street. The level lot features mature trees and foundation plantings.
Single dwelling NC

534 Logan Street 130-0006-0456 (Address was 538 Logan in original survey and inventory)

This Colonial Revival-style apartment building probably dates to the 1950's. It is two stories tall and seven bays wide and is constructed of Flemish bond brick. It has a hipped roof with projecting hipped end bays that is covered with asphalt shingle. The symmetrical façade features large eight-over-eight double hung wood windows flanked by louvered shutters. A two-story porch covers the middle three bays of the front elevation. It is supported by paneled square posts and has a square balustrade on the first story and an 'x' balustrade on the second. The main entrance is flanked by sidelights and four additional doors open onto the porch from the separate apartments. There is a frame, one-story, multi-bay, shed roofed garage located behind the apartments. The garage bays appear to lack doors. The apartment building faces south on the north side of Logan Street. The lot is mostly open with minimal foundation landscaping.
Multiple dwelling C
Garage NC

544 N. Main Street 130-0006-0463

This one-story, three-bay, gable-front commercial building dates to the 1970s. The brick (stretcher bond) building is Colonial Revival in style with a pedimented front gable with a raking dentil cornice and a fanlight in the pediment. Two window openings with brick jack arches flank the central front door which is sheltered by a half-hipped hood. The windows are now fixed vinyl 21-light sash. The building is multiple bays deep and occupies most of the parcel. It faces east on the west side of N. Main Street. A small grass lawn is located between the front of the building and the public sidewalk and a couple of shrubs are planted at the foundation.
Commercial building NC

This one-story, Modern-style brick building was built in the 1960's and is a departure from the more typical turn of the century brick commercial buildings in South Boston's downtown corridor. The building has a flat roof, an asymmetrical façade with one bay, and gray-white brick laid in stretcher bond on the façade. The side elevations appear to be cinderblock. A pierced concrete block screen beside the front door is the only decoration on the building. The entrance consists of double leaf aluminum and glass doors surrounded by fixed single light windows in aluminum frames. The building is currently called the Cordura Security Building. It faces east on the west side of N. Main Street. The building has a set back of about ten feet from the public sidewalk and planting beds with shrubs and ground cover occupy this space. The building occupies almost the complete width of the lot and most of the depth.

Commercial building NC

604 N. Main Street 130-0006-0465 (Address was 600 N. Main Street in original survey and inventory)

This one-story commercial building has either changed dramatically since 1986 or the service station recorded in the original survey was demolished and replaced with this building sometime in the last 20 years. The existing building appears to be brick construction, partially stuccoed, and has a vaguely gable front and wing form. The façade has four asymmetrically arranged bays, including the large glass primary storefront of the Dominoes Pizza business currently occupying the building. The other bays include two additional aluminum and glass doors and an aluminum single-light window. The building is oriented catty corner on the lot facing the intersection of N. Main Street and Broad Street and the portion of the lot not occupied by the building is paved for parking.

Commercial building NC

Trinity Episcopal Church, N. Main Street 130-0006-0466

This Colonial Revival church is laid in Flemish bond brick and has a front gabled roof. The façade contains a single bay, the primary entrance, while the side elevations contain four symmetrical bays. The main entrance is accented with an elaborate Colonial-style molded brick architrave of rubbed brick around a full-arched, double-leaf paneled door. An arched multi-light double-hung window is vertically aligned in the gable above the door. All window openings, including the one in the gable and the ones on the side elevations, are arched and accented by rubbed brick. A modillioned wood cornice is found on the side elevations. The main sanctuary of the church facing Main Street was built in 1964. An earlier church building facing Yancey Street (a cornerstone says 1927) is now attached to the rear of the newer building by a series of additions and annexes. The small front yard of the church is surrounded by a four-foot high brick wall (also Flemish bond) with a rounded top. A slate path leads from the public sidewalk along N. Main to the front steps of the church. Large shrubbery is located in the walled yard.

Church NC

Michelin Service Station, N. Main Street 130-0006-0467

This utilitarian service station (ca. 1960) is built of concrete block and has a shed roof. It has two service bays and an office bay. A porte cochere extends over the office bay and out over the former pump island (pumps are no longer present). The concrete block building has metal framed windows in the office and the side elevation of the service area. It faces west on the east side of N. Main Street. The entire lot is paved and used for parking.

This two-story, three-bay, double pile Colonial Revival house (ca. 1950s) is now connected by an arcade to the United Methodist Church next door. The brick house (stretcher bond) has a side gabled roof flanked by two interior end chimneys and a symmetrical façade. A modillioned cornice decorates the façade and cornice returns are found on the gable ends. The paneled front door is accented by a Colonial Revival frontispiece with pilasters and capped with a transom. Brick steps and a brick stoop with a metal railing provide access to the front door. Windows are twelve-over-twelve double-hung wood sash on the first story and eight-over-eight on the second. All are flanked by fixed louvered shutters. A side porch on the south elevation has a gabled roof and square posts and is now connected to the similarly detailed arcade leading to a side entrance of the church next door. A large one-story addition, also brick, has been made to the rear of the house. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces west on the east side of N. Main Street. The large lot is heavily treed with mature hardwoods and well-groomed foundation plantings surround the house. The rear yard is fenced with a privacy fence and a low (one to two foot) stone retaining wall lines the front edge of the lot along the public sidewalk. A concrete path leads from the sidewalk to the front stoop.

First Baptist Church, 800 block N. Main 130-0006-0470

This large brick church building and annex occupy a large portion of the east side of the 800 block of N. Main Street. The octagonal sanctuary is fronted by a two-story, three-bay section with a tetrastyle Tuscan portico with a modillioned cornice and a lunette in the pediment. Front and side windows are stained glass. A belfry with a conical roof is located on top of the octagonal sanctuary. A large brick two-story extension exists on the rear of the sanctuary and another one story brick annex is located on the north side of the church. This complex was built ca. 1979 and later. The church faces west on the east side of N. Main Street. The lot is level and what isn't covered by the building footprint is manicured lawn. Some foundation plantings exist around the buildings. A very wide brick pathway leads from the public sidewalk to the front entrance.

This one-and-a-half-story, three-bay Colonial Revival-style brick house has a side-gabled roof and a symmetrical façade (west elevation). An interior end chimney is located on the south gable end and a one-story screened in porch is located on the north gable end. The exterior of stretcher bond brick may be a veneer. The asphalt shingle roof is punctured by three gabled dormers holding six-over-six windows vertically aligned above the first story openings. The main entrance is located in the center bay on the first story and features a Colonial Revival-style door surround with reeded pilasters. The single-leaf door is flanked on each side by a large window opening holding four multi-light casement windows. These window openings are accented by narrow applied, louvered shutters. The front entrance is accessed by a semi-circular brick stoop with a metal railing. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. A brick wall (approximately 2 ½ feet high) lines the public sidewalk along the front lot line and a driveway consisting of concrete ribbon tracks leads from the street along the south edge of the lot. A concrete path leads to the front stoop. Landscaping includes a large tree in the front yard and overgrown shrubs along the front elevation.

This one story commercial building was built as an ABC store in the 1940s. It features a low parapet with an ashlar block veneer and reeded stone or concrete pilasters flanking the storefront. The recessed central entry is flanked by curving glass block corners and plate glass windows. A green stone material covers the base of the walls below the windows. A non-historic black fabric awning spans the width of the façade. The building faces west on the east side of S. Main Street and adjoins other commercial buildings on both side elevations. The front is flush with the public sidewalk.

Commercial building C

This one-story brick commercial building has vertical board siding on the façade and a low parapeted flat roof. The north side elevation is exposed brick but the south side adjoins 309 S. Main. A flat metal awning supported by tie rods shelters four plate glass windows and a recessed entry. The building was probably constructed in the late 1940s. The building faces west on the east side of S. Main Street. The front is flush with the public sidewalk.

This one-story brick-veneered commercial building was constructed in the 1940's and has been heavily altered. It has a flat roof and is located immediately adjacent to two flanking commercial buildings in South Boston's commercial corridor. A deeply recessed main entrance is flanked by plate glass windows. An asphalt shingle pent roof spans the width of the façade. The store originally had an enameled metal cladding and a streamlined metal awning, both emblematic of 1940's commercial architecture. The loss of all of the historic materials gives the building a very modern feel and it has therefore been determined non-contributing. The building faces west on the east side of S. Main Street and is adjoined by other commercial buildings on either side. The front is flush with the public sidewalk.

Ca. 1958, two-part, commercial block building, concrete foundation, flat roof, exterior of Roman brick, original storefront of plate glass windows, glass and metal double doors, canvas awning above, central bay of four original, four-light, metal jalousie windows in upper façade, metal panel topped with a metal railing spanning an inverted parapet.

410 S. Main Street, Sun Trust Bank 130-0006-0460

This one-story modern bank building was constructed in the 1970s and does not fit with the historic streetscape of the rest of the commercial corridor. The building has a flat roof and a brick veneer. One bay holds a glass entryway. The building faces east on the west side of S. Main Street. A small lawn is located on the east and south sides of the building and a drive through is located to the rear.

This two-story, three-bay commercial building has a flat roof and is located in South Boston's commercial corridor. A building surveyed on the site in the 1980's dated to ca. 1960, but that building has either been completely altered or demolished and replaced with the current building. The first floor is clad with a brick veneer and features two modern plate glass windows flanking modern double leaf aluminum framed glass doors. The second story is clad with vinyl siding and holds two double-hung, one-over-one, vinyl windows. A pent roof with asphalt shingles separates the stories. The building faces west on the east side of S. Main Street and is adjoined by other buildings on either side. The front is flush with the public sidewalk.

1314 Moore Street 130-0006-0484 (Address was 1311 Moore Street in original survey and inventory)

This one-story, three-bay frame house is capped with a hipped roof covered with asphalt shingles and rests on a cinderblock foundation. It was probably built in the 1940s or 50s. The house is sheathed with aluminum siding and the six-over-six wood windows are flanked by applied vinyl shutters. A front gabled entry porch shelters the central entrance and is supported by trellised metal supports. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces south on the north side of Moore Street. The lot slopes down in the rear and is dominated by two large shade trees in the front yard and additional mature trees along the rear lot line. Small foundation plantings are located along the front elevation and overgrown plantings are located along the west lot line which is partially marked by the remains of a cinderblock wall. A straight concrete path leads from the sidewalk to the front door.

Single dwelling C

1320 Moore Street 130-0006-0486

The one-story, four-bay, ranch-style house has an attached carport and was likely built in the 1960s or 70s. The house has a side gabled roof and is clad with aluminum siding. A large picture window is located to the right of the front door; other windows are

This one-story Colonial Revival style ranch ca. 1970 has a central three-bay section with a side gabled roof extending over an engaged front porch which is flanked on either side by matching two-bay sections also with side gabled roofs. An attached carport is located on the south elevation. The house features a stretcher bond brick exterior with siding in the gables and an asphalt shingle roof. The large windows are eight-over-twelve double hung sash flanked by applied louvered shutters. The two windows flanking the front door in the central block are capped by full arched fan-shaped panels. The front door is flanked by pilasters and capped by a broken pediment. Porch columns are square wood posts. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces west on a corner lot at the intersection of Peach Avenue and Hodges Street. The lot rises gently from the public sidewalk where it is lined with a brick retaining wall. A concrete driveway leads from the street to the carport and a concrete walk leads from the public sidewalk to the front porch. Mature shrubs line the foundation along the front elevation.

This one-story, ranch-style frame dwelling appears to have been built in the 1960s or 70s. It has a side gabled roof and attached carports on both ends of the house. The house has an asymmetrical four-bay façade and a variety of window types and sizes, including a large picture window flanking the front door. A partial width, shed roofed front porch is supported by trellised metal supports and lacks a balustrade. The house is clad in aluminum siding and the roof is covered with asphalt shingles. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces south on the north side of Shepherd Street. The level lot features plantings around the foundation, two asphalt driveways leading to the two carports, a picket fence lining the side lot lines, and an asphalt walkway leading from the public sidewalk to the front porch.

Single dwelling NC

This one-story, three-bay brick cottage is capped by a side gabled roof and has a single exterior end brick chimney on the east side elevation. It appears to date to the 1950s or 60s. The centrally located main entry is sheltered by a one bay entry porch with a gabled roof supported by trellised metal supports. Paired six-over-six double hung wood windows flank the entrance. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles and the house is laid in stretcher bond brick. The house faces north on the south side of Shepherd Street. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. Foundation plantings surround the house and a mature hardwood and a mature conifer tree are located in the front yard. A straight concrete path leads from the street to the front porch.

1343 Shepherd Street 130-0006-0499 (Address was 1341 Shepherd in original survey and inventory)

This one-story, two-bay house was probably built in the 1970's. It is of frame construction and has vertical siding (T-111?) and a side gabled roof. A full-width front porch has a shed roof supported by square posts and an 'X' balustrade. Windows are one-over-one double-hung sash. There is a one-story, one-bay, front gabled detached garage behind the house. The house faces north on the south side of Shepherd Street. The level lot features a large mature hardwood tree in the front yard and shrubbery around the foundation. A gravel driveway runs along the eastern side of the lot to the garage in the rear and a deteriorated concrete walkway leads from the street to the front porch.

This one-and-a-half-story frame cottage was probably constructed in the 1940s, possibly earlier. The house has a three-bay façade with a side gabled roof and a steeply pitched front gabled projecting bay. The main entrance is located on the side of the projecting bay and is sheltered by a one story, one bay porch supported by replacement turned posts. In 1986 the porch had Tuscan posts, a turned balustrade, and scroll brackets, but all of these details have been altered. The house has been wrapped with vinyl siding and applied vinyl shutters flank the six-over-six wood windows. It rests on a brick foundation and has an asphalt shingle roof pierced by a single interior brick chimney at the ridge line. A modern gambrel roofed shed, also with vinyl siding, is located towards the rear of the partially fenced lot. The house faces north on the south side of Sixth Street and it is the only historic house left on the south side of Sixth Street. The landscaping includes large shrubs along the foundation and a mature holly-type tree in the front yard. An overgrown walkway and brick steps lead from Sixth Street to the front porch.

This one-story brick ranch-style house appears to date to the 1960s. It has a gable front and wing form and a five bay façade. The eight-over-eight double-hung wood windows are flanked by functional louvered shutters with shutter dogs. The front entrance is flanked by sidelights and accessed by brick steps to a brick stoop. There are no secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces south on the north side of Third Street. The lot is dominated by large mature hardwoods in the front yard and has minimal foundation plantings. A low brick retaining wall lines the front lot line and a concrete driveway that runs along the west side of the lot.

This one-story frame house has four bays on the asymmetrical front façade and appears to date to the 1960s. The side-gabled roof is pierced by one narrow interior brick chimney at the ridge. A shed roofed, partial width porch supported by trellised metal supports covers the left half of the front elevation. The house is clad with vinyl siding and has an asphalt shingle roof. The windows are six-over-six double hung wood sash and are paired in the left-most bay of the front elevation. The main entrance consists of a paneled wood door with an aluminum screen door. The front porch floor is concrete and it connects with a concrete path leading to the street and with a concrete driveway running along the east edge of the property. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property. The house faces north on the south side of Third Street. The lot includes a concrete driveway, a concrete walkway to the street, a dogwood tree, and mature shrubs around the foundation and porch.

This one-story, one-bay cinderblock garage does not appear to be associated with a house or other business. It has a large paneled vehicle door on the east elevation and two windows with metal frames on the south elevation. The flat or shed roof appears to have a low parapet. It was built in the 1950s or 60s and does not contribute to the architectural significance of South Boston. The garage faces east on the west side of Thomas Street. The lot surrounding it is overgrown with weeds. Several houses are located immediately to the north and on the other side of Thomas Street but it isn't clear if the garage is associated with any of them.

This large, two-story brick commercial building is the former Leggett Department Store. The building has a flat roof and a front parapet. It looks like the original building (ca. 1960s) was expanded to the north during a later building campaign. Three new banks of windows have been installed on the second floor of the earlier section, while the first floor is largely blank. Conversely, the second floor of the expansion contains only a single square window while the first floor contains several modern aluminum doors and windows. A boxy metal awning runs the full length of the building. This urban commercial building sits flush with the public sidewalk and occupies the entire parcel. There are no visible secondary resources associated with this property.

South Boston Historic District
Boundary Increase and Nomination Update

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The South Boston Historic District is representative of the town of South Boston's industrial, commercial, and residential development from the mid-nineteenth century to the 1930s. Founded as a depot on the Richmond and Danville Railroad in 1854, the city prospered rapidly as a tobacco marketplace. Before the Civil War, Halifax County was the largest producer of tobacco in Virginia, and one of the top in the nation. By the turn of the century, South Boston was the nation's second largest bright leaf tobacco market in Virginia, drawing farmers and buyers in the sale of raw and processed tobacco. Within the existing district, buildings associated with the tobacco industry include warehouses, factories, and prizeries, as well as related commercial and residential buildings. The dwellings represent the architecture of the town's residents during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The original nomination was prepared in 1986 and the district's period of significance ended at 1936. The resurvey of this section of South Boston resulted in the recommendation to expand the existing district as well as reevaluating properties within the original district boundary. The district's period of significance now extends to 1958 to include properties associated with the town's industrial and residential expansion in the mid-20th century. Until tobacco declined as the basis of South Boston's economy, the town maintained a stable population. By 1960, however, patterns shifted as agriculture gave way to manufacturing as the primary economy of the town. Much of the loss of population in Halifax County resulted as farmers, facing government regulations and corporate agriculture, sold out. A century of tobacco-based prosperity had come to a close.

The South Boston Historic District Nomination Update and Boundary Increase changes the status of forty-seven (47) resources from non-contributing to contributing and adds an additional 128 contributing buildings or sites, and nineteen (19) noncontributing buildings to the district. This increase results from survey efforts in 2007. The neighborhood east of the existing district and adjacent to the C.H. Friend School (601 Marshall Avenue, 130-0006-0542) contains several blocks of early 20th century residential architecture. Other neighborhoods adjacent to the existing boundaries are significant in the town's African American history. Specifically, the 1900-2400 blocks of North Main Street and sections of Ragland, Mineral, and Johnston Streets and Watkins and Noblin Avenues are traditional African American neighborhoods. These neighborhoods continue to be occupied by African American residents, and churches in the neighborhoods have provided continuity through several generations. A fourth area included in the boundary extension contains the New Brick Warehouse (701 Jefferson Avenue, 130-0006-0596), reflective of South Boston's tobacco heritage, as well as a number of dwellings in the vicinity. The areas included in the boundary extension consist of the remaining contiguous blocks adjacent to the original South Boston Historic District boundary that meet National Register criteria.

CRITERIA STATEMENT

Properties in the areas of the expansion are significant under Criterion A for their association with South Boston's African American history or industrial history and under Criterion C for architecture because they are integral components of the town's continuous development as a premier tobacco market in the nation. Beginning in the late nineteenth century and even through the depression years, South Boston's industrial opportunities drew white and African American laborers and investors. Industrial workers created neighborhoods near their employment, representing core areas of South Boston's African American community. Middle and upper class residential neighborhoods in the boundary expansion represent the town's continued architectural development into the mid-twentieth century. The resources from the 1940s and 1950s represent the last years of South Boston's historic prominence in the tobacco industry.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

South Boston traces its origins to a community established in 1796 at Boyd's Ferry on the Dan River in Halifax County, Virginia. The river community was prone to occasional flooding, thwarting growth. During the 1850s, infrastructure development greatly influenced growth of the town of South Boston. In 1854, the Richmond and Danville Railroad was completed, establishing the town as a depot. The rail line opened up eastern markets for the area's plentiful agricultural products. increased access to the town from out-lying farm lands.¹ Captain E. B. Jeffress and builder Josiah Dabbs constructed a brick warehouse to serve as a general mercantile business. Travelers stayed at the hotel that Jeffress built in 1856.²

Before the Civil War, Halifax County began to prosper from tobacco. It was the largest tobacco-producing county and slave-holding county in the state of Virginia. Following the Civil War, E.B. Ellison of Milton, North Carolina, became the first to build a tobacco warehouse at South Boston in 1871. W. L. Wade built a second warehouse the following year, and South Boston swiftly became a major tobacco trading center with public auctions. The town's population grew to 187 by 1884, prompting its petition for incorporation from the General Assembly on February 19th of that year. The settlement known as South Boston Depot officially became South Boston, and the town elected its first mayor, Wiley W. Ward.³

Maps created by the Sanborn Fire Insurance Company depict the development of the town by 1889. Main, Broad, Factory, and Ferry Streets were principal arteries of transportation, and each had buildings associated with the tobacco industry. Main Street had four: the Edmondson Leaf Tobacco Warehouse, the Star Warehouse, the Shepherd & Edmondson Warehouse, and the J. W. Easley Leaf Tobacco Warehouse. Tobacco sales were conducted in these buildings, and two hotels, the South Boston Hotel and White's Hotel, were built in the area to accommodate travelers to the sales. While the original location of these buildings can be found within the existing boundaries of the historic district, none of the buildings is extant today. Tobacco prizeeries, where the raw product was processed, were found on Broad, Factory, and Ferry Streets.

Several tobacco industry-related buildings are extant and date from the late nineteenth century. These are included in the original nomination: the former R. J Reynolds Tobacco Prizeery (130-0006-0309), ca. 1890, on Seymour Drive, the former Liggett-Meyer Tobacco Prizeery (130-0006-0039), ca. 1920, on Factory Street, and the Imperial Tobacco Company warehouse (130-0006-0258), ca. 1890, on Watkins Avenue. These warehouses are two-story buildings of brick construction from South Boston's flourishing tobacco trade. An additional tobacco warehouse, included in the boundary expansion, is the New Brick Warehouse at 701 Jefferson Avenue (130-0006-0596). This ca. 1935, two-story tobacco warehouse is located at the northern end of the industrial district. Sanborn maps from 1929 show that this warehouse was not yet built at that time. It is another architectural representative of the tobacco industry of South Boston and demonstrates the vitality of South Boston's tobacco industry, even into the Depression era. In the adjacent neighborhoods on Randolph and Washington Avenues, new residential construction occurred in the 1940s and 1950s. Those dwellings, included in the boundary expansion, are mostly of Colonial Revival style.

Primarily, the tobacco industry was responsible for South Boston's growth and development. Prior to the Civil War, Halifax County was Virginia's top producer of tobacco, and one of the top in the nation. The county was also home to the Slate Seed Company, which was the largest producer of tobacco seed in the world. Founded in 1867 by Robert L. Ragland, the company supplied ninety percent of the world's tobacco seed.⁴ Following the Civil War, Danville's tobacco market expanded rapidly, and South Boston benefited from its position on the Richmond and Danville Rail line. By 1902, South Boston sold between seven and eight million pounds of tobacco, up from two million in the 1890s. Sales increased to 13 million by 1907, and by 1909, sales of tobacco reached 17 million pounds, boosting South Boston to the rank of the second largest bright leaf tobacco market in Virginia (behind Danville), and the nation. The tonnage continued to increase, helping South Boston maintain this rank until the Great Depression. In 1927, sales passed 20 million pounds.⁵ In 1929, Halifax County tobacco growers harvested 556 pounds per acre from 30,328 acres, equating to approximately 16.8 million pounds.⁶

Wage earnings and population of Halifax County and South Boston also indicate increasing prosperity from the late nineteenth century, with a decline following the 1929 economic crash. At the turn of the twentieth century, Halifax County's population was 36,952. At that time South Boston's population was 1,851, with 360 wage earners showing $96,137 in earnings. By 1910, the population of South Boston experienced a ninety percent increase to 3,516, while Halifax County grew approximately 8.5 percent to 40,044 during the same period.⁷ Thus, more than half of these 3,092 new Halifax County residents were located in South Boston. By 1919, the population of Halifax County was 41,374 and in South Boston 270 workers were employed at twenty-nine businesses, earning $211,623. As the county’s population remained just above 41,000 through 1950, wage earnings through this period illustrate the economic dynamics for a relatively fixed population. By 1929, wages rose to $423,012 among 533 wage earners at thirty-five businesses. In light of a constant population, the effects of the Depression are underscored in the decrease in wage earners (404), businesses (seventeen), and wages ($217,925) in 1935. Improvement can be seen by 1937, with 568 workers at twenty-six businesses earning $407,833.⁸

Population and race demographics for Halifax County are illustrative of its agrarian, historically slave-based economy. Prior to the Civil War, Halifax County was Virginia’s second largest slave-holding county (after Henrico County). In 1860, 14,897 slaves were in Halifax County; ten years later, the number of freed African Americans was 16,256. In 1890, Halifax County’s population was 34,387 (1,789 in South Boston), with 19,416 African American to 14,972 white.⁹ As late as 1900, the African American-to-white population ratio of Halifax County was 19,275 to 17,677. In 1910, the ratio was almost exactly equally divided among the county’s total population of 40, 044.¹⁰

Following the Civil War, most African Americans in Halifax County were agricultural workers although many also moved to South Boston in order to find employment. One of the trends in the tobacco industry in the late nineteenth century was the employment of African American women in the stemmeries. This was dirty and demanding work but provided a source of steady income for African American women. White women also entered the tobacco industry in these years but they were employed in larger numbers as cigarette rollers as opposed to the work in the stemmeries. In the early twentieth century hundreds of African American residents were employed in South Boston’s tobacco stemmeries and warehouses.¹¹ In addition to the tobacco industry, textiles also became an important source of employment in the early twentieth century. The Century Knitting Mills, the South Boston Weaving Corporation and Carter Fabrics Corporation were all placed in operation in these decades. The first of these became Halifax Cotton Mill (130-0006-0288); the second became Capital Plastics, Inc., manufacturing plastic buttons, and Carter Fabrics came to specialize in synthetic fabrics like Dacron and nylon.¹² Of these businesses, only the Halifax Cotton Mill retains an intact historic building within the existing historic district, located on Railroad Avenue.

The traditional roles of employment in South Boston are demonstrated in statistics from the 1930 United States census. Employment statistics for Halifax County show that in tobacco factories 211 males and 236 females employed were African American, and 303 males and 238 females were white. Most of the positions in tobacco re-drying warehouses were filled by African American laborers, with the exception of a foreman, machine operators, and a few mechanics. Such plants, operating ten hours per day, typically employed under 150 people, the majority of whom were usually African American women. Work in the tobacco industry was an alternative to domestic service for these women. Employment in cotton mills, however, was almost exclusively white: 123 females and 220 males versus only, eight (8) male and two (2) female African Americans. The railroad industry employed large numbers of both African Americans as well as whites and domestic and personal services were typically held by females: 600 African American and 658 white workers were employed in these occupations in Halifax County in 1930.¹³

In 1930, Halifax County’s population was 41,283; South Boston’s population then was 4,841. The county remained predominantly agricultural; the gainfully employed numbered 13,439 white residents to 6,246 black residents. In each group, two-thirds were engaged in agricultural livelihoods.¹⁴ During the Depression, African Americans who had secured urban employment in tobacco warehouses were the first let go when businesses became financially strained. Those employed in the services industry, such as laundry workers, barbers and domestic help, found that these became luxury services that people could do without during tough times. As African American workers’ incomes shrank or disappeared, the businesses they patronized experienced financial distress. Conditions for African Americans were worse in larger cities, and by comparison, African American farmers were more able to cope with the challenges of providing for their families.¹⁵

As African Americans migrated from rural areas, they created distinct neighborhoods, often building a church as a focal point of the community, and in the vicinity of employment opportunities. It is known that the oldest African American congregation in South Boston was established in 1865 on Ferry Street within the industrial section of town. The First Baptist Church (130-0006-0056) is located within the existing historic district. The church, led by Minister Alexander Pamplin, was a log chapel constructed on land donated from the Bruce family of Berry Hill Plantation, the largest slaveholder in the county. Pamplin had formerly served as Berry Hill's butler, and it is thought that many of the congregation's original members were freed slaves from the plantation. The building was enlarged and had stained glass windows added in 1918; brick veneer was added to the exterior in the 1960s.¹⁶ Within the boundary expansion, an early African American neighborhood is near the Imperial Tobacco Warehouse on Watkins Avenue. This African American neighborhood was centered around Ragland Street, which was originally called African Street. A map from 1884 indicates the area was undeveloped at that time but by 1890, an African American neighborhood had evolved centered on Mizpah Presbyterian Church. This church was established in 1890 with Reverend J. E. Mooreland as minister, and served residents on Ragland, Mineral, and Johnston Streets between Watkins and Noblin Avenues. Reverend Parham B. Ragland operated a one-room school in the back yard of his home on the same street. This school (no longer extant) is considered the first public education available to black students, as Ragland was able to secure some funding from the town of South Boston. "The existence of Ragland School and its meager town support led to the establishment of the first truly public school for blacks, the grammar school in the Mayfield area eventually known as M.H. Coleman Grammar School."¹⁷ However, the school was mostly privately funded, as was its successor. Beginning in 1912, (some accounts suggest 1901), the Mizpah Presbyterian Church operated a parochial school. Students paid ten cents per week to attend. Classes were held in the church sanctuary. The first teachers were Reverend and Mrs. Abraham Kendrick and Mrs. Gertrude L. Bruce. Reverend Kendrick was the church pastor from 1909 to 1926. The African-American neighborhood regarded the church as a community center.

By 1918, Sanborn maps indicate that the Mizpah Presbyterian Church added a side wing, suggesting that growth of the community required an expansion of classrooms. Classes were offered for grades one through seven in reading, writing, math, and Bible studies. In 1935 classes at Mizpah were discontinued, and the side wing was used as a day care center for working mothers. Dwellings in this neighborhood are mostly one-story, vernacular forms from the early twentieth century.¹⁸

While many buildings within black neighborhoods of South Boston were of vernacular form, notable African Americans distinguished themselves as architectural craftsmen, working on prominent structures. Carpenter Jerry Walker, from Scottsburg, worked on the 1858 bridge across the Dan River, the 1891 Planters and Merchants Bank on South Main Street and the 1893 residence of Richard R. Noblin (a tobacco warehouseman) on Washington Avenue (both within the existing historic district). Also attributed to Walker is the 1887 Queen Anne addition to Seaton, residence of William Howerton, just north of the town of South Boston off highway 501. John H. Hamilton, another African American builder, was known to have worked in South Boston with his brothers Allen and Robert Ray doing carpentry, construction, and masonry work, beginning in the late nineteenth century. The Hamiltons are responsible for building several tobacco warehouses, including the Independent, Star, and Edmondson. John H. Hamilton is credited with constructing over twenty buildings in South Boston, including the R.S. Barbour House (1906), Boston National Bank (1919), and the First Presbyterian Church (1922) The brothers also remodeled the nineteenth-century Lord Halifax Hotel in Halifax in 1927, updating the establishment with a veranda, tapestry brick, and a fireplace in the lobby. John H. Hamilton's work became a family business, as his sons also became builders, reconstructing parts of downtown South Boston destroyed by fire in 1906. His grandsons also joined the family business.¹⁹

Another of Hamilton's buildings, the Ebenezer Christian Methodist Episcopal Church located at 2309 North Main Street, figures prominently in a second historically African-American neighborhood added within the boundary expansion. The neighborhood is located along North Main Street, beginning in the 1900 block, where the current district ends, and extends through the 2400 block, at the intersection of Hamilton Boulevard. Established in 1876 in the Dickerson community of Washington City, the Ebenezer Christian Methodist Episcopal Church congregation moved to the North Main Street location in 1878. Elijah Hodges deeded the land, and until a small church was built, services were held under an arbor. In a short time, a log and stone church was constructed. Area residents assisted in the construction of this church, as well as its replacement, a frame structure built in 1896, hauling in materials on ox carts.²⁰

The church became the center of an African American neighborhood that began its growth in the late nineteenth century, serving farm families in outlying areas and the middle class professionals who moved to South Boston in the early twentieth century. The latter built homes along North Main Street primarily from 1900 to 1930, with some dwellings dating back to the 1890s. The construction of the majority of these dwellings coincides with the third (brick) incarnation of the Ebenezer C. M. E. Church, a 1926 brick church that replaced the frame one. (This, however, was destroyed by fire in 1966, and the current church was built on its foundation, completed in 1968.) The construction of the brick building represents the permanence and prosperity of the African-American neighborhood by the 1920s.²¹

Though the church building in its present form is non-contributing, the historic congregation’s long-time presence provided the community a focal point on North Main Street, surrounded by residences included in the boundary expansion. A prominent member of the Ebenezer C. M. E. Church was Dr. Henry Grant Wood, South Boston’s first African American physician. Wood and his wife Sally moved to South Boston some time shortly after 1900, when he graduated from Shaw University Medical School in Raleigh, North Carolina. They lived near the church at 1723 North Main Street (130-0006-0483). The couple was extremely civic minded, fostering children in their home. Also, Mrs. Wood in 1912 accepted the position as the first principal of the Williams Normal and Industrial School for minority students, operated out of the Ebenezer Church. Many in the community referred to the school as “Mrs. Wood’s School.” The school offered classes in English, math, social studies, science, and industrial skill courses for six to seven months of the year, as farm families needed to work during the growing season. The school produced teachers, skilled trades-people, and college attendees.²² Thus, the Ebenezer C. M. E. Church, as the Mizpah Presbyterian Church, served as an important community center, both to its immediate neighborhood as well as to rural families.

Another neighborhood included in the boundary expansion is located at the 600 through 900 blocks of Marshall Avenue, in the vicinity of the C. H. Friend School. Charles H. Friend arrived in South Boston in 1903 to accept the position of principal of the public high school on Jeffress Street. Friend remained the principal of South Boston’s public high school for thirty-nine years and was regarded as the individual most influential in educational progress in the town. With the growth of the town’s population, he moved with the school to various locations, including in 1923 to a new building on Peach Avenue, and this school was named in his honor. After a fire destroyed this school in 1936, the new C.H. Friend High School, an impressive Colonial Revival building on Marshall Avenue, opened for classes in March of 1939.²³ The movement of the school eastward mirrors the expansion of South Boston’s middle class neighborhoods. With industrial landscapes to the south and west of the town, residential neighborhoods of middle class families developed to the east. Construction dates of dwellings attest to the gradual, continuous growth of the neighborhood from 1890 to the 1950s. American Foursquares are as likely as bungalows, with Colonial Revival the prevailing style.

At the time that the C.H. Friend School opened, Halifax County’s population was 41,271, down slightly from 41,283 in 1930. However, during the same period South Boston’s population had increased by 411 to a total of 5252.²⁴ Two new textile manufacturers had opened during the 1930s, the South Boston Weaving Company and Carter Fabrics Corporation. In 1946 Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation came to South Boston. By 1946, South Boston’s industries and manufacturers included thirty-six establishments employing 1,156 wage earners whose collective wages totaled $1,896,000. Burlington Industries opened a plant there in 1947. By 1950, South Boston’s population had grown to 6,057, up by 805. During the same period, the county’s population, however, had grown only slightly to 41,422 (up 139 from 1940). Demographics for the county at that time show the population was 56 percent white and 44 percent African American. Roughly half of Halifax County’s workforce was engaged in agriculture. However, South Boston continued to attract a variety of manufacturers in these years including U.S Plywood Corporation, Capital Plastics, and J.P. Stevens Company Incorporated, maker of synthetic fibers.

Halifax County has maintained a population slightly over 41,000 people from 1920 through 1950. In subsequent years, the population of Halifax County dropped each decade, which reflected the loss of family farms and the rise of agribusinesses. By 1960, the county population was 33,637; by 1970, 30,076. In 1972, only one-third of the area's workforce earned a living in agriculture, still led by tobacco, but also including cattle, milk and poultry. Approximately one-third of the population was employed in manufacturing, and another third, in non-manufacturing jobs.²⁵

The nomination update and boundary expansion enhances the original district nomination through the inclusion of properties associated with industrial, ethnic, and architectural history of South Boston from the 1930s to 1958. These are cohesive areas of architectural development in the vicinity of the C.H. Friend School on Marshall Avenue and the North Main Street and Ragland Street communities, which are also associated with the town's heritage. These African American neighborhoods provided a source of labor in tobacco, manufacturing, domestic service and other industries and reflect the influx of both migrating rural blacks and professionals seeking to establish minority communities. Additional areas for inclusion contain properties that are in the area of the New Brick Warehouse, as well as along and within the residential blocks to the east of North Main Street that are associated with South Boston's commercial and residential development between the 1930s and 1958. The boundary increase reflects the largest number of contiguous properties retaining integrity adjacent to the original district boundary.

VERBAL BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

The boundary increase for the South Boston Historic District includes properties along the edge of the original district boundary that were surveyed as non-contributing at the time. The boundary increase includes all contiguous properties retaining integrity that meet National Register criteria and are associated with the period and areas of significance. These areas include sections of four distinct areas that are outlined above in the Verbal Boundary Description. These four areas contain properties significant in the growth and development of South Boston as well as properties associated with the Town’s historic African American neighborhoods. Outside of these areas are properties that lack sufficient connection or cohesion with the original district. This lack of connection is primarily due to new construction or alterations to buildings.
