7. Summary Description

Mount Calvary Lutheran Church is located in the Stony Man area of Page County, Virginia. The Church is situated on a knoll at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains, at the end of a long dirt access road. The building is a well-preserved and pristine mid-nineteenth-century church building. It has had no additions and virtually no interior or exterior alterations since it was constructed in 1848.

At the southwestern portion of the church property is a small cemetery. Some of the graves have modest stones and there are also unmarked graves. The cemetery has no fencing or formal boundaries. There is also a non-contributing privy on the property.

Detailed Description

The Mount Calvary building is situated on the eastern portion of the church property. The building is a slightly rectangular two-story structure with a gable roof. The building footprint dimensions are roughly thirty-four by forty feet. The ridge of the roof follows the length of the building from east to west. The building has a standing-seam metal roof, with decorative snow birds. The building roof has slightly overhanging eaves with hung half-round gutters. The building is constructed of brick laid in American bond, with a row of headers for every five rows of stretchers. The brickwork is of high quality and the bricks appear to have been locally kilned. A brick water table surrounds the building. Nine-over-six windows are used on the first-floor and six-over-six windows on the second floor. Original wooden shutters cover the first-floor windows.

The southern elevation of the building is the primary facade. It consists of three symmetrical bays. The first floor has a central window flanked by two double doors. Three windows are on the second floor above. The northern elevation of the building is largely devoid of openings, with only two windows on the first floor. The east and west elevations each have two symmetrical bays, with two windows on each floor. In the gable of the western elevation is a small datestone with the date 1848. The use of the datestone is consistent with a nearby church building from the same era, Grace Lutheran Church, which was built as a German Reformed Church in 1835.

The interior arrangement has the unusual feature of being oriented on the interior to the long side of the rectangle, instead of the shorter ends. This arrangement is similar to the early meetinghouses in the Shenandoah Valley and northern Virginia of dissenting denominations. In this case the building type is adapted to the needs of liturgical worship with an altar platform on the northern side of the interior. The two entrances may have served as men's, and women's entrances. More probably they simply provided access to the two side aisles.

On the first floor there are seven main rows of pews, and three rows of pews placed at a right angle to those. A raised platform against the north wall supports the pulpit. A communion table is placed in front of the platform. Two Champion model # 134 stoves are situated at the terminus of each of the aisles. It is speculated by Gaylon Waters of Luray, that originally the building had two stoves of local manufacture where the Champion stoves are now situated.

A circa 1890 pump organ is located to the left hand side of the platform. Throughout the structure are flared window cases that enhance the admittance of natural light into the interior.

A large gallery extends around three sides of the interior. The gallery structure is supported by simple columns of the Tuscan order. Above the columns there is a system of panels and balusters. The second and third rows of gallery pews are raised on platforms one behind the other. Two small stairs at the east and west ends of the building provide access to the gallery. Throughout the building a high degree of craftsmanship is shown in the joinery.

Nearly all of the interior woodwork is finished with red mahogany stain. According to Mary Jane Goode, who grew up as a member of Mount Calvary Church, the plaster walls have been painted white as long as she can remember. However, an inspection of the plaster walls indicates evidence of an earlier light blue paint. Several of the gallery pews were also painted this same blue color. This would have been a paint scheme typical of local and cultural tradition and can also be seen in the pink and green paint of the nearby Grace Lutheran Church.

Secondary resources include a cemetery whose earliest date is unknown at this time, though there are two recorded stones from 1882 and 1911-12. Both stones have the last name of Printz, a common German name. There is also a non-contributing wood frame privy.

8. Summary Statement

Mount Calvary Lutheran Church is eligible as locally significant for listing in the National Register under Criterion C. The current building is a pristine example of religious architecture built in 1848, with important examples of craftsmanship, decorative treatments, and other characteristics associated with meetinghouse architecture of the period. The Period of Significance (1848 – 1912) runs from the date of construction until the date of last documented cemetery stone.

The building is a virtual time capsule that appears almost exactly as it did when it opened. Mount Calvary Church is an important landmark of German architecture and local craftsmanship in Page County. The building is an important example of a meetinghouse floor plan successfully adapted to the needs of liturgical worship. The mahogany finishes are important intact interior finishes, as well as an example of local craft practices. The building interior, with its use of the Tuscan order, exhibits a high degree of architectural craftsmanship and finish. The building came during an era of impressive brick construction in Page County that included: large farm complexes, Luray townhouses, and churches. This architectural era followed construction of the Page County Courthouse, an important architectural model completed in 1831.

Historical Background

Mount Calvary Lutheran Church can trace its origins back to the first German settlers in the Page Valley area. In 1726 Adam Mueller led a group of families to the vicinity of present-day Luray. This early group of Germans from Pennsylvania was of the Mennonite, Lutheran, and Reformed denominations. It was known as the Massanutten settlement and is considered to be the first group of German settlers to locate in the Shenandoah Valley area.

It appears that the Massanutten Lutherans managed with difficulty to retain their denominational identity. A group of Moravians in the 1740s visited the community and noted the presence of Lutherans and German Reformed in the area. The Moravians found them disorganized and noted that "nearly all religious earnestness and zeal is extinguished among them." No record is known of any formal Lutheran organization during this period. The early Lutherans in Page County were simply referred to in early records as the Lutherans living in the Massanutten Settlement.

John Caspar Stoeber, George Samuel Klug, and Johannes Schwarbach, three early pastors of Hebron Church in present-day Madison County, are credited with being the first pastors to serve the Massanutten Lutherans. At the time the Hebron pastors were virtually the only Lutheran clergy in the Virginia colony and ministered to the needs of a number of Shenandoah Valley congregations. These ministers came to the Massanutten Lutherans only a few times a year to conduct baptisms, and perform marriages. A communion chalice from Mount Calvary Church dated 1727 suggests that communion was provided by the Hebron pastors as well. No documentation has been found of a house of worship or a particular location for services.

Over time the Massanutten Lutherans were able to organize on a more secure footing. The earliest indication of a formal Lutheran organization is a deed from 1765 from Pastor Johannes Schwarbach to Peter Panter and Jacob Schafer, who were apparently trustees of the Lutheran Church. The land was specifically deeded for the use of a "congregation". How Rev. Schwarbach came to control the land is unclear.

A church building was formally constructed on the site shortly thereafter. No information has come to light as to the appearance or materials of this structure. It may be assumed that it was log structure. Like many churches in the Shenandoah Valley it was a union church shared by German Reformed and Lutheran congregations. The church appears to have been known interchangeably during this period as Comer's (also spelled Comer, or Comber in the 1765 deed) after the family that owned the adjoining farm, or Hawksbill (originally Hoxbiehl) after nearby Hawksbill Creek.

The predominance of German immigrants and the relative isolation of Page County allowed German culture to thrive in the area. German was the first language and in many cases the only language of the community until the early nineteenth century. This cultural environment also allowed the retention of traditional German crafts including painted interiors, painted furniture, and fraktur. In addition, German was the language of worship and music in the community until the mid-nineteenth century. At Mount Calvary, the records of the congregation were kept in German until the 1860s. The oldest English-language hymnals discovered in the sanctuary bear the date 1860.

Starting in the late eighteenth century pastors from Woodstock and New Market began to serve the Hawksbill Lutherans. Notable among these were Peter Muhlenberg and members of the Henkel family. The closer proximity of these pastors implies that worship was held on a more regular basis during this era.

In the early nineteenth century a number of notable changes occurred in the Hawksbill Lutheran community. By 1817 the congregation had named itself Mount Calvary, an appropriate reference to its setting. By 1822 the property had come into the exclusive use of the Lutherans. It was at this time that the congregation constructed a second church building on the site. After being affiliated for much of its history with the Pennsylvania Ministerium, the short-lived Virginia District of the Pennsylvania Ministerium, and the North Carolina Synod, the congregation joined the Virginia District of the Tennessee Synod in 1820. The meeting of the Virginia District was held at Mount Calvary in May, 1860. The congregation did not become a part of the Virginia Synod until 1918.

Over the course of the nineteenth century the Hawksbill settlement slowly started to prosper. Large barns and farmhouses started to appear across Page Valley. The town of Luray was established in 1812, and it became the seat of newly created Page County in 1831. The descendants of the Massanutten settlers over time became successful farmers. The construction of a number of substantial farm complexes in the middle and later decades of the century reflected this. By the early nineteenth century iron foundries and the related charcoal industries also became an important part of the local economy. The Shenandoah River and later the Sperryville Turnpike provided a means of transporting the commodities of the area to market. During this period of prosperity, the congregation constructed the present building. The third church building on the site was completed in 1848.

Page County continued to grow and prosper after the Civil War. In 1885 the Shenandoah Valley railroad came to the community, providing growth to the town of Luray and a ready market to the farmers of the community. During this era Mount Calvary Church launched an expansion program under the direction of Rev. J.N. Stirewalt.

Stirewalt was apparently the first full-time pastor in the history of the congregation. This expansion movement reflected the growth of Mount Calvary (which had been the only Lutheran church in the area) and the need for churches that would better serve the widespread Page Valley Lutherans. Starting with Morning Star on Dry Run near Stony Man in 1873, the new churches included: St. Mark's in Luray (1875), Grace in Ida (1878), St. James north of Luray (1882), and Beth Eden east of Luray (1896). Rev. Stirewalt served most of these churches until his death in 1906. Over time most became large successful congregations.

The group of congregations (less St. James, and St. Mark's) would become known as Stony Man Parish in reference to the general neighborhood. Stony Man Parish built a large parsonage in Luray in 1911. The success of the daughter congregations would prove to be the end of Mount Calvary as an active congregation. After the size of the congregation dwindled, regular services ceased to be held in 1959. Since that time the use of the building has been restricted to occasional homecoming services. At the bequest of the Trust of Mr. Claude E. Dofflemeyer of Luray, an effort was initiated to nominate the building to the National Register of Historic Places and the Virginia Landmarks Register. The owners of the buildings, the Mount Calvary Lutheran Trustees, are considering how to best use the building.

The Mount Calvary Lutheran Church property was listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register in 1998. With restoration underway, in an effort to use the building again, Reverend Dr. Alice Davis has provided current photographs in an effort to finally list the resource in the National Register of Historic Places.

10. Geographical Data

Verbal Boundary Description:

The boundary includes all the property on tax parcel 53-A-44 as provided by the Page County Real Estate Office. This is the parcel that corresponds to the property as addressed at 279 Somers Road, and was recorded first in 1765 on Page 197 of Deed Book H; and then slightly enlarged in 1850. An attached sketch map shows the triangular property at a scale of 1/2" = 500'.

Boundary Justification

The boundaries include the original property deeded to the congregation in 1765 and slightly expanded in 1850. The boundaries include the church building, cemetery, privy, and the intact extent of the property during its period of significance. There have been no intrusions or modifications to the property that would warrant a change in boundary size.
