Section 7, Page 1

DESCRIPTION:

Summary

The Stephen B. Quillen House is a two-story wood frame house with a wraparound front porch set over an ashlar-laid rusticated limestone foundation. It is built in the Queen Anne Revival Style and is located on a corner lot (corner of Church and Lively Streets) in one of the original neighborhoods of the Town of Lebanon in Russell County, Virginia. The house has many features that are typical of the Queen Anne Revival Style: it has a steep hipped roof with lower cross gables, a wraparound first floor porch, and simple door and window treatment. It is architecturally significant to the Town of Lebanon and Russell County as a good example of residential architecture in the early twentieth century.

Inventory

1. The Stephen B. Quillen House (1912). Contributing building.
2. Garage (ca. 1955). Noncontributing building.

Landscape Features

The house sits on the northwest corner of its nearly one-acre lot with the front façade facing east. The landscape and setting for the house are typical for its period and have not been altered since the time of the house's construction. A small concrete sidewalk leads from Church Street. The house is framed by two red maples; holly and snowball bushes accent both the house and the street corners. The south section of the house lot is a grass lawn and a vegetable garden. A small, one-story, concrete block, gable roof garage is located on the northwest corner of the house lot facing Lively Street. It appears to have been built in the mid-1950s.

House Exterior

The front façade is asymmetrical in composition. The main block of the house has a steep hipped roof, and a lower gable wing steps out slightly from the main block; it is two stories in size, and the corner walls are set at a 45-degree angle that gives the wing a bay window effect. The stained oak front door is set in the center of the façade; it has an oval glass panel in the upper two thirds of the front door leaf. The front door is flanked by two large sidelights, and a large transom spans both the front door and the sidelights. A large double-hung window is set to the south of the front door, with the second-floor windows lining up above the south window and the front door.

The front porch spans the entire front façade and also wraps around both the north and south facades. It is a one-story wood-framed open porch that is five bays in size and is very simple in form, being composed of 10-inch-diameter, full-length classical columns, simple fascia and beams, and no pickets or rails. The porch rests on a limestone ashlar base.

The north and south façades are similar to the front/east façade, being also asymmetrical in form. The south façade has a similar two-story wing set in front of the main block, and the lower porch ends at the wing. The north façade has a square gable wing set perpendicular to the east façade and another wing set facing the west and the rear section of the house. The rear of the house has a two-story shed roof addition. The roof is covered with standing seam metal, and two chimneys are centered in the hipped roof. The walls are covered in poplar clapboard that is exposed 5 inches. All of the windows are double-hung sash, with the sashes having only one pane of glass.

House Interior

The interior of the house has a central hall which goes from the front to the rear of the house and four rooms working off the central hall, with one room working off the rear addition. The second floor is similar to the first floor. There is a small basement under the rear section of the house. Notable features include a coal chute, a large concrete cistern, and a milk trough where milk and other food perishables were stored.

The ceilings of the house are high; the first-floor ceilings are 11 feet tall, and the second-floor ceilings are 9 feet tall. All of the rooms have oak floors and plaster walls. A main staircase going from the first floor to the second floor is located in the central hall. It is built of red oak and has square pickets, elaborate railings, and recessed panel wainscoting and carriage treatment. The trim is also of red oak; it is typically simple and plain, composed mostly of 5-inch-wide rounded boards. The baseboards are 11 inches tall and have cyma recta base caps.

The house has two sets of tall pocket doors that are located in the two front parlors. The rear doors on both the first and second floor have cut beveled glass panels set above three recessed panels. There are four coal-burning fireplaces on the first floor, and each room on the second floor had a coal-burning stove that was placed in front of the chimney mass. Mantles are all veneered oak with scrolled pilasters and simple shelves. The Quillen House has remained virtually unaltered since it was first built and is a very good example of Queen Anne Revival architecture in western Virginia.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Summary Statement of Significance and Justification of Criteria

Local builder and businessman Nathan W. Easterly built the Stephen B. Quillen House in 1912 as a speculative business venture. The house was purchased in 1918 by longtime Russell County attorney Stephen B. Quillen. It was one of the first houses built in the Church Street neighborhood of Lebanon and is located behind Main Street and within view of the bell tower of the Russell County Courthouse. With its steep and irregular roof, wraparound porch, and cutaway bay windows, it stands as one of the few remaining Queen Anne Style houses in the Town of Lebanon. The house also retains all of its refined red oak interior woodwork. The Stephen B. Quillen House is eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C in the area of Architecture, at the local level of significance. It represents many of the residential architectural trends of middle class-houses in the later nineteenth century and the early twentieth century in the Town of Lebanon and Russell County. The property's period of significance, 1912-1951, commences with the house's construction date.

Acknowledgments

The author wishes to thank the following individuals for their assistance in the preparation of this nomination: property owners Dr. and Mrs. S. Hughes Melton; the grandson of Stephen B. Quillen, Stephen Marshall Quillen; and the Russell County Regional Library. Dr. John R. Kern and Mr. Mike Pulice of the Roanoke Regional Preservation Office and Mr. Marc Wagner, National Register Coordinator of the Virginia Department of Historic Resources, were also helpful in the preparation of this nomination.

Historic Background

The Stephen B. Quillen House was built on one of the original house plots in the Town of Lebanon. Nathan W. Easterly built the house as a speculative venture in 1912. Easterly owned a lumber mill in Lebanon and built several speculative or investment houses during the last part of the nineteenth century and the early twentieth century.¹ In 1918, Stephen B. Quillen purchased the house from Easterly for $8,000.00.²

Stephen Banner Quillen was a native of Russell County; he was born in Castlewood, Virginia, in 1872. He attended Wake Forest College, where he earned a law degree, and was admitted to the Russell County Bar in 1895. In 1897, he married Mary Alice Ashbrook; they had one son, Ira Marshall Quillen, who was born in 1898. In 1909 the family moved to Lebanon from Castlewood. Stephen Quillen was an active citizen in Lebanon and Russell County. He served as Mayor of Lebanon and as Russell County Commonwealth Attorney from 1916 to 1924. He was a member of the Russell County School Board and was the Russell County Appeal Agent for the draft board in both World War I and II; he also served on the Electoral Board and the Russell County Public Welfare Board.³

Quillen practiced law in Russell County from 1895 until his death in 1965. At that time he was regarded as "Virginia's longest practicing lawyer." Colleagues and friends still remember his personal motto: "wit is something, but tact is everything." He outlived his son Ira, who shared a law practice with him, and he later practiced law with his grandson, Stephen Marshall Quillen.⁴

Stephen Marshall Quillen along with his brother, James William Quillen, inherited the house and used it as rental property until 1988.⁵ From 1988 until 2000, the Quillen House was unoccupied but minimally maintained. In 2000, the current owners, Dr. and Mrs. S. Hughes Melton, purchased the house; they intend to make it their residence.⁶
