SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The town of Abingdon is centrally located in Washington County at the intersection of U.S. Routes 11 and 58. Situated in the Holston River Valley, the town arose along the Great Valley Road (now U.S. Route 11) and later the Norfolk and Western Railway to become an important commercial and transportation center for much of Southwest Virginia during the late 18th and 19th centuries. Incorporated in 1778, the town originally featured three main east-west streets--Main, Valley, and Water (now Park) streets--intersected by several minor north-south streets, forming a grid pattern that was repeated as the town expanded during the 19th century. The east end of town is known for its notable collection of late 18th- and early 19th-century brick residences and commercial buildings lining Main Street. An 8½-block section of this street was designated as the Abingdon Historic District and listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1970. The Abingdon Historic District Extension primarily consists of 12 blocks of Valley Street, which extends parallel to Main Street. The area was excluded from the original district because most of the residences which line the street date from the late 19th and early 20th centuries, historical periods not considered significant in the original district nomination. Valley Street contains at least five antebellum dwellings; several late 19th-century vernacular, Italianate, and modified Queen Anne dwellings; a number of early 20th-century brick and frame bungalows; and a few Colonial Revival and Tudor Revival residences. The district extension also contains Sinking Spring Cemetery which consists of about six acres at the junction of Valley Street, NW and Russell Road near the west end of Abingdon. Located at the site of an early Presbyterian Church (c. 1773), Sinking Spring Cemetery contains numerous graves of prominent Abingdon citizens including two Virginia governors. Also included in the district extension is William King High School which is situated atop a hill overlooking Sinking Spring Cemetery. Constructed in 1913, this Colonial Revival building remains a prominent Abingdon landmark. Other small extensions of the historic district include a half-block of West Main Street, two blocks of East Main Street, two blocks of Oak Hill Street, a block of Whites Mill Road, and the two westernmost blocks of East Park Street. These areas contain an interesting collection of antebellum, late 19th-century, and early 20th-century brick and frame dwellings. The Abingdon Historic District Extension contains 138 contributing buildings, 13 contributing structures, and two contributing sites. It possesses few modern intrusions totaling 29 noncontributing buildings and 2 noncontributing structures.

ARCHITECTURAL ANALYSIS

Although the town of Abingdon was founded in 1778, few late 18th-century structures survive within the boundaries of the original town plan. In fact, no 18th-century structures are known to exist along the entire length of Valley Street which comprises most of the historic district extension. One quarter-acre lots were laid out along Valley Street between Slaughter Street (now Pecan Street, NE) and Tanner Street in 1789 and the town limits were extended east of Tanner Street to Eighteen Mile Creek in 1819. Nonetheless, few permanent buildings were constructed along Valley Street before the 1820s. Probably crude frame or log dwellings and commercial structures associated with the tanyard, forges, and wagon making establishments originally lined the muddy street. These businesses are mentioned in a description of the town in 1835:

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The town of Abingdon, situated in the Holston River Valley, has served as the transportation, commercial, and political hub of Washington County since its appointment as the county seat in 1778. Originally a small frontier settlement consisting of a courthouse, jail, and a few taverns and houses, Abingdon prospered in the 19th century by its strategic location first on the Great Valley Road and later on the Virginia-Tennessee Railroad. During the last century Abingdon merchants controlled and supplied an increasing share of Southwest Virginia's profitable wholesale trade, while its local industry ranked sixth among tobacco manufacturing centers in the state. Besides its economic importance to the county and region, Abingdon has a long and distinguished tradition as a town of lawyers and judges. The local bar and bench has produced outstanding political leaders including three Virginia governors. Architecturally, the town is best noted for its handsome collection of well preserved antebellum brick dwellings and commercial buildings lining Main Street at the eastern end of town. This area was placed on the National Register of Historic Places as the Abingdon Historic District in 1970. The proposed extensions to the district along Valley, King, Park, and Oak Hill streets, and White's Mill Road and at the eastern and western ends of Main Street contain several early 19th-century buildings; however, they are primarily significant for their late 19th- and early 20th-century residential architecture. These additional dwellings exhibit a rich diversity of architectural styles and building practices from the 1870s to the 1920s. Styles represented include the Italianate, Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, Bungalow, and Tudor Revival. Anchoring the western end of the Valley Street extension is Sinking Spring Cemetery which contains the graves of many of the town's foremost citizens; and the William King High School, a visually prominent symbol of the community's abiding concern for education.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The area that now comprises the town of Abingdon was originally part of a 6,780-acre tract of land granted to Dr. Thomas Walker in 1752. The Great Valley Road leading from the Shenandoah Valley to Cumberland Gap passed through the area encouraging settlement as early as the 1760s. By 1774 several families had settled in the vicinity of the present town of Abingdon and had erected a log Presbyterian church and established Sinking Spring Cemetery. For protection against hostile Indians, they also constructed a small fort known as Black's Fort on Eighteen Mile Creek. When Washington County was formed by act of the Virginia General Assembly in 1776, Black's Fort was chosen for the meeting of the first county court and the following year Dr. Walker, Joseph Black, and Samuel Briggs donated to the county 120 acres of land near Black's Fort for the purpose of establishing a county seat to be known as Abingdon. Subsequently, the town's two principal streets -- Main and Water (now Park) streets and the lots bordering these streets were laid out and surveyed in 1778. Although a modest courthouse and jail were constructed that year, the

7. DESCRIPTION -- Architectural Analysis

Abingdon contains, besides the ordinary county buildings, between 150 and 200 dwelling-houses, many of them handsome brick buildings. There is an academy for females and one for males (both brick edifices), 2 hotels kept in good style, 3 taverns principally used for the accommodation of wagoners, 1 manufacturing flour mill, 9 mercantile houses, 3 groceries, 1 woolen and 2 cotton manufactories. There are 4 tanyards with saddle and harness manufactories attached to them, 10 blacksmith's shops, 1 hat manufactory and store, 6 wheelwrights and wagon makers, 2 cabinet warehouses, [and] 2 boot and shoe factories.¹

Although several such businesses were still operating at the east end of Valley Street as late as the 1880s, Valley Street gradually became a popular residential street during most of the 19th century. Lending distinction to the area was the Abingdon Male Academy, considered one of the finest school buildings in western Virginia at the time of its construction in 1827. The brick building, remained a prominent local landmark until its demolition in 1872.²

The earliest surviving building on Valley Street is the Alexander Findlay House located at the corner of Valley and N. Church streets. In 1827 Findlay paid the trustees of the Abingdon Academy forty-two dollars for the property on which he built his house.³ It is a 1½-story brick structure situated upon a raised basement with both side and rear additions dating from the early 20th century. The house features several Colonial Revival additions including front and side Ionic porticos, a large central pedimented dormer, and an elaborate frontispiece entrance with an elliptical fanlight.

Another early 19th-century house is the Gabriel Stickley House, built about 1830, at 239 Valley Street, NE. It is a simple two-story frame house with interior end brick chimneys and an asymmetrical facade with 9/6 double sash windows and a three-light transom over the entrance. The house is handsomely restored.

A similar early 19th-century house, the Daniel Trigg House located at 210 Valley Street NE, is also a frame and weatherboarded two-story house with exterior end brick chimneys, a five-bay symmetrical facade, and 9/6 and 6/6 double sash windows. Late 19th-century additions include a central front gable and full-length front porch with sawnwork.

The only other known antebellum dwellings on Valley Street include the Ann Berry House at 221 Valley Street NE, a 1½-story frame house, supposedly built ca. 1830, and the John G. Clark House at 314 Valley Street NE. Located at the east end of the street, the original mid-19th century brick portion of the Clark House later served as the residence of John G. Clark, a wagon manufacturer whose business establishment was next door. The gable end of this simple two-story brick house faces the street and serves as a front ell to a larger frame addition built to the west around the turn of the century. Tall 6/6 double sash windows and multi-light transoms have been retained in the original brick section.

7. DESCRIPTION -- Architectural Analysis

One other early-to-mid-19th-century house is situated at 223 King Street NW, a street parallel and north of Valley Street. It is a two-story frame house with an exterior end brick chimney, but has undergone several alterations and additions since its construction. This house and four later houses on King Street are included in the historic district extension.

By the late 19th century Valley Street had become a fashionable residential street featuring Abingdon's finest residences. Three stylish brick houses are especially indicative of the prosperity the town experienced shortly after the Civil War. They include: the Daniel Musser House at 247 Valley Street NE, erected in 1869; the David G. Thomas House at 153 Valley Street NE, probably built during the 1870s; and the Sinking Spring Presbyterian Church Manse at 121 Valley Street NE, built 1878-80. All three are handsome Italianate-style brick dwellings set back from the street to allow for spacious lawns. They feature projecting front eaves, shallow gable or hipped roofs, wide overhanging and bracketed eaves, tall double- or triple- sash windows, and wide porches with decorative sawnwork. In addition, a small log outbuilding of unknown original use is seen to the rear of the Thomas House. Improvements to Valley Street such as its partial macadamization and the placement of brick sidewalks bordering the eastern end of the street contributed to the area's desirability as a popular residential neighborhood.

Simple two-story frame dwellings along Valley Street, most with simple front gables and 3-5 bay symmetrical facades, are representative of middle class residential architecture of the late 19th century in Abingdon. They include the houses at 152, 185, 210, 315 Valley Street NE and 301 Valley Street NW. All of these houses possess full-length porches adorned with decorative sawnwork. One house features a fanciful bargeboard while another displays scalloped gable trim.

Shortly after 1884 Valley Street was extended westward from Church Street and a number of late 19th- and turn-of-the-century frame houses were erected along this new extension. The more modest houses along this stretch of Valley Street are typically two-story L-shaped structures with projecting front eaves, asymmetrical facades, and three-bay porches adorned with decorative sawnwork. Examples include houses at 152, 158, and 212 Valley Street NW. The majority of houses along Valley Street NW, however, are modified Queen Anne-style houses. Representative examples include residences at 164, 200, 203, 274, 305, 309, and 313 Valley Street NW. Although no two buildings are identical, all share common characteristics of the Queen Anne style such as irregular massing, a variety of gables, bays, projections, and roof lines, and wide porches displaying turned posts, sawn brackets, and spindle friezes. The eastern end of the district extension also contains two notable modified Queen Anne-style houses at 132 and 337 Valley Street NE and 268 Whites Mill Road. Several stone retaining walls extend across front lawns along Valley Street, adding an element of texture adjacent to herringbone-patterned brick sidewalks. Greatly enhancing the picturesque quality of the street are rows of mature shade trees that tend to frame houses and soften the streetscape.

7. DESCRIPTION -- Architectural Analysis

Interspersed among the older houses on Valley Street and lining both sides of the 200 and 300 blocks of Oak Hill Street are a number of excellent examples of early 20th-century bungalows. Those on Valley Street tend to be located primarily along the western extent of the street. All of these dwellings are 1½-story brick or frame structures with sweeping gable roofs and wide overhanging eaves, large central gables or dormers, paired or tripled windows, and wide front porches supported either by square brick piers, a brick arcade, or tapering wood columns on brick piers. The best examples are houses at 126, 132, 133, 136, 250, 277, and 289 Valley Street NW, 120, 270, and 334 Valley Street NE, and at 236, 263, 279, 309, and 317 Oak Hill Street. Nearly all of the residences on Valley Street are considerably removed from the street and face wide lawns.

Other early 20th-century architectural styles are not as well represented along Valley Street. Nevertheless, a fine example of a large Colonial Revival-style residence is seen at 125 Valley Street NW. It is a two-story frame dwelling with a five-bay symmetrical facade, a central broken pedimented portico, an entrance topped by an elliptical fanlight and flanked by sidelights, and features a bracketed modillion cornice across the front. A Tudor Revival-style stucco house with prominent half timbering is also seen at 111 Valley Street NW. A gable roof with flared eaves, narrow windows, and an arched doorway surrounded by rustic stone adds to its quaint appearance.

Abingdon's oldest burial ground, Sinking Spring Cemetery, is situated at the junction of Valley Street and Russell Road at the western extent of the historic district extension. Comprising approximately six acres, the cemetery marks the site of the first Sinking Spring Presbyterian Church, a log structure built in the early 1770s by one of the earliest Presbyterian congregations in Southwest Virginia. Larger buildings replaced the original church until the congregation built a new church on Main Street in 1831. The cemetery, however, continued to be the primary burying ground for the area from 1773 throughout much of the 19th century. Containing approximately 2000 marked and 500 unmarked graves, the cemetery features a variety of grave markers ranging from crude fieldstones to elaborately carved marble statuary. Many mark the graves of Abingdon's most prominent and significant citizens including two Virginia governors, legislators, judges, ministers, merchants, early pioneers, and veterans from the American Revolution to the Korean War. A small northeast section of the cemetery was reserved for black citizens of Abingdon and another area enclosed by a low brick wall was set aside in 1863 as a burial ground for an undetermined number of unknown Confederate dead.

An interesting reminder of Abingdon's pioneer heritage is seen in the one-story log dwelling situated in the southeastern corner of Sinking Spring Cemetery. Although originally located a few miles north of town and moved to its present location in 1971, it is a good example of a "saddlebag" two-room plan log structure of V-notched construction with a central stone chimney and two separate front entrances. The log house was supposedly built ca. 1773 for the Rev. Charles Cummings, first pastor of the Sinking Spring Presbyterian Church and considered the first Presbyterian minister established in southwestern Virginia. His grave is located near the house.

7. DESCRIPTION -- Architectural Analysis

Situated on a high hill overlooking Sinking Spring Cemetery to the northwest is a prominent Abingdon landmark -- William King High School. Built in 1913, it is an excellent example of Colonial Revival-style school architecture of the period. A two-story brick building on a high basement, the school features a 2-story pedimented portico with paired Tuscan columns, paired brick pilasters at each building corner, wide frieze and molded cornice below an encircling brick parapet, and a central second-story semi-circular arched window embellished with keystones and imposts. Although currently vacant, plans for the building's future revitalization are being considered by the town.

Along with the historic district extension on Valley Street including parts of King Street and Whites Mill Road, three small extensions west, south and east of the present Abingdon Historic District are also deemed appropriate. The western extension contains five buildings in the 100 and 200 blocks of W. Main Street. Included are two late 19th-century L-shaped brick houses at 159 and 165 W. Main Street. Both feature projecting front ells and a minimum amount of decorative treatment. Two handsome brick houses at 179 and 201 W. Main Street are also a part of the extension. Built in 1918 and 1922 respectively, the houses exhibit elements characteristic of the Colonial Revival style such as pedimented porticos and pavilions, a hipped roof, modillion cornice, and Flemish bond brickwork. The most significant residence at the western end of town is the James Fields House at 208 W. Main Street. A distinguished Greek Revival-style house built in 1857, the Fields House is a two-story rectangular brick dwelling with a shallow hipped roof and original brick rear ell. Tall 9/6 and 6/6 double sash windows and a central front tripartite window are capped by heavy plain lintels and the central entrance is highlighted by a wide 5-light transom and flanking sidelights. A cornice of paired Italianate brackets was probably added during the late 19th century.

The eastern extension of the historic district consists of thirteen late 19th- and early 20th-century brick and frame houses in the 300 and 400 blocks of East Main Street. Most of these dwellings are L-shaped vernacular dwellings with projecting front ells and porches with sawnwork.

The southern extension of the district lies south of East Main Street and consists of a two-block area bounded by East Main, South Church, East Park, and South Pecan streets. This area contains eight buildings including three early-to-mid-19th-century frame and weatherboard dwellings at 111, 119, and 124 East Park Street. These two-story vernacular houses have either exterior or interior end brick chimneys, 6/6 double sash windows, and front porches that appear to be later additions. The early-to-mid-19th-century George Sandoe House at 123 Pecan Street SE is another significant house in the extension. It is a 2-story brick house with partially projecting end chimneys, an asymmetrical 4-bay facade, multi-paned double sash windows with flared stuccoed jack arches, and a front entrance with transom and sidelights. A front porch and north wing are 20th-century additions.

The four extensions of the Abingdon Historic District contain a variety of residences ranging from modest vernacular to stylish period houses, an historic cemetery, and an early 20th-century school. These buildings and site help to further illustrate the historical development of Abingdon from the early 19th century to the present. The pleasant streetscapes within the extensions are rarely interrupted by modern architectural intrusions.

8. SIGNIFICANCE -- Historical Background (con't.)

town was slow to develop during its early years. A description of the town in 1782 reveals a small frontier community consisting of a log courthouse, log jail, several taverns on Main Street and a few houses. ¹

In January, 1789 the town's Board of Trustees ordered that "all that part of town lying north of the lots on the north side of Main Street be laid off into one-fourth-acre lots and that a street be laid off three poles wide." ² The proposed street was named Office or Valley Street and today comprises much of the historic district extension.

By 1800 Abingdon had advanced from the rude settlement stage to become a transportation hub for Southwest Virginia. The town's location on the Great Valley Road (now U.S. Route 11) and the construction of the Abingdon-Saltville Turnpike in 1803 led to the establishment of many local businesses catering to the needs of travellers. While Main Street supported several taverns and inns, Valley Street, especially the eastern end, hosted several blacksmith shops, wagon manufactories, wheelwrights, and saddle and harnessmakers.

During the next several decades Abingdon achieved prominence as a regional commercial center, serving not only Southwest Virginia, but parts of Tennessee and Kentucky as well. A large percentage of the wholesale trade for the area was controlled and supplied by Abingdon merchants and all regional mail was distributed at the Abingdon post office, the first established in southwestern Virginia. ³

The first flush of commercial prosperity favored the establishment of the town's first newspaper, The Holston Intelligencer and Abingdon Advertizer in 1806 and the incorporation of the Abingdon Male Academy, which moved from Water Street to an area north of Valley Street in 1827.

Besides its role as a commercial center, Abingdon served throughout the 19th century as an important political and judicial center for the region. The town had erected a new brick courthouse on the public square by 1810 and, being the county seat of Washington County, naturally attracted lawyers and judges as residents. Members of the local bar and bench established offices primarily on East Main and Court streets while erecting dwellings on Main Street, Valley Street, and the outskirts of town. Several Abingdon lawyers became state and national political figures including Virginia governors John B. Floyd (1830-34) Wyndham Robertson (1836), and David Campbell (1837-40); several congressmen and U.S. senators; and a number of state legislators and cabinet officials.

Indicative of the town's growth and prosperity during the first half of the 19th century are several brick residences and commercial buildings on Main Street and a number of modest frame and brick dwellings on Valley, Park, Pecan, and King streets in the historic district extension. At least five antebellum houses survive on Valley Street. They include the Alexander Findlay House, built ca. 1827; the Gabriel Stickley House, built about 1830; the Daniel Trigg House (mayor of Abingdon in 1846 and president of the Exchange Bank of Virginia, one of the oldest banks in Southwest Virginia) and the Ann Berry House--both built during the early 19th century; and the John G. Clark House (mayor of Abingdon in 1874 and 1877) which probably dates from the mid-19th century. Other antebellum dwellings within the historic district extension are the Greek Revival-style James Fields House, built in 1857 at the corner of W. Main and Cummings streets, S.E., the early 19th-century frame dwelling at 223 King Street, N.W., three early-to-mid-19th-century frame houses at 111, 119, and 124 E. Park Street, and the George Sandoe House (postmaster of Abingdon 1861-65), a brick dwelling at 123 Pecan Street, S.E.

So rapidly did Abingdon grow during the early 19th century that the Virginia General Assembly thrice extended the town's corporate limits: in 1803, 1819, and again in 1834. In addition, Main Street was macadamized in 1833, after which date the town's Board of Trustees required owners of lots facing Main Street to provide curbstones and brick-paved walkways along the edges of their properties. Martin's Gazetteer of Virginia describes the town in 1835:

Abingdon contains, besides the ordinary county buildings, between 150 and 200 dwelling-houses, many of them handsome brick buildings. There is an academy for females and one for males (both brick edifices), 2 hotels kept in good style, 3 taverns principally used for the accommodation of wagoners, 1 manufacturing flour mill, 9 mercantile houses, 3 groceries, 1 woolen and 2 cotton manufactories. There are 4 tanyards with saddle and harness manufactories attached to them, 10 blacksmith's shops, 1 hat manufactory and store, 6 wheelwrights and wagon makers, 2 cabinet warehouses, [and] 2 boot and shoe factories.

Abingdon is rapidly increasing in population and trade. Old houses are giving place to handsome brick buildings, which the opulent and enterprising citizens are daily erecting. Population [is] 1000 persons, of whom thirteen are resident attorneys, and 3 regular physicians.⁴

Vigorous development occurred at the western end of town after 1856 when the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad built a depot on the site of the present Norfolk and Western passenger station. After the Civil War rail transport of lumber, livestock, local agricultural products, especially tobacco, and dairy products to eastern markets enabled Abingdon to maintain its regional position as an important transportation and commercial crossroads until nearly the end of the 19th century. That Valley Street became a fashionable residential street in the period after the Civil War is illustrated by the handsome Italianate brick dwellings erected there during the 1870s and 1880s. Daniel Musser, who operated a local carriage factory and served as a member of the town council, built his residence at 247 Valley Street, N.E. in 1869. The house was later owned by George V. Litchfield, Jr., who served as mayor in 1873. The residence of David G. Thomas, who also served as mayor in 1856, was erected at 153 Valley Street, N.E. The Sinking Spring Presbyterian Church manse was built 1878-80 at what was then the western end of Valley Street. Similar brick dwellings of the period appear at 151, 159, and 165 W. Main Street and at 402, 414, and 418 E. Main Street, and are also included in the historic district extension. Gray's Map of Abingdon, published by O. W. Gray and Son of Philadelphia in 1880, shows that nearly all the lots at the eastern end of Valley Street contained residences. The remaining lots were improved for commercial or industrial uses by such businesses as a foundry, blacksmith, and wagon manufactory.

During the late 19th century, the area between the depot and the town proper arose as a new commercial area rivaling the traditional commercial establishments at the eastern end of town near the courthouse. After 1884 Valley Street was extended westward from N. Church Street to Sinking Spring Cemetery and saw the erection of numerous frame and brick houses along its new stretch of road. Especially notable are modified Queen Anne-style houses constructed around 1900 at the western end of Valley Street. They include houses at 164, 200, 203, 274, 305, 309, and 313 Valley Street, N.W. A few similar dwellings were also built on Oak Hill Street, White's Mill Road, and at both western and eastern ends of Main Street.

In 1887 the Abingdon Coal and Iron Railroad was constructed from Abingdon to Damascus which was later extended as far south as Elkland, N.C. in 1912. Originally built to transport iron and coal resources from the Shady Valley area south of Damascus, the railroad became more important as an outlet for the rich timber resources of the region. Renamed the Virginia-Carolina Railroad and later sold to the Norfolk and Western Railway in 1912, the railroad heightened Abingdon's importance as a shipping center for timber and lumber products of southwestern Virginia.⁵

Abingdon also supported several local industries during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Besides tanneries, coach and wagon manufactories, and saddle and harness shops, at least two plug tobacco and cigar manufactories operated in Abingdon, the largest being J. C. Greenway Company. By 1879, the local tobacco industry employed forty-eight persons and the annual production of the town's two factories was valued at $92,500, making Abingdon the sixth largest tobacco manufacturing center in Virginia.⁶

Between 1890 and 1900 the population of Abingdon decreased by about 20%, from 1,674 to 1,340, the only known period of population decline in the town's history. This fall in population can be partly attributed to the decline of Abingdon as a shipper of coal and iron compared to the rising towns of Bristol and Bluefield.⁷ Since no railroads connected the main line of the Norfolk and Western Railway at Abingdon to the rich coal reserves in Tazewell and Wise counties, Abingdon could not compete with other towns that benefited from such an advantage. Abingdon, however, did succeed in retaining most of its local industries, especially those associated with the tobacco industry, and thus continued to serve as a viable commercial trade center for the region during the early 20th century. According to detailed Sanborn Insurance Company maps of Abingdon in 1928, industries within the town's corporate limits included Pet Milk Company, James A. Hagy Wagon Company, Inc., Washington County Creamery, Inc., Vance Supply Company, Inc. (hardware, lumber, etc.), J. A. Thayer Wagon Shop, Abingdon Coal and Ice Company, Bernard Vann Tobacco Warehouse, Farmer's Tobacco Warehouse, several tobacco drying houses, a cigar factory, several wholesale grocers near the depot, and an unusual number of garages and auto repair shops (at least nine). Although no buildings associated with these industries are located within the historic district extension, several stylish early 20th-century houses representing the general prosperity of the town's residents during this period are interspersed among older residences on Valley Street. Oak Hill Street is also lined with fine examples of bungalows and cottage-like residences of the 1920s.

William King High School, built in 1913, is also indicative of the general prosperity of the town during the early 20th century. The school is an imposing Colonial Revival-style building situated atop a hill overlooking the town and Sinking Spring Cemetery. The handsome building is also a tangible symbol of the concern for education that has characterized much of the town's history. Beginning with the founding of the Abingdon Male Academy in 1803, followed by the Abingdon Female Academy in 1840, Martha Washington College in 1860, and Jackson Female Institute, later known as Stonewall Jackson Institute, in 1868, William King High School became the latest in a long line of educational facilities that served citizens of the town and region. The building also reflects the growing statewide commitment to secondary education in the early 20th century.⁸

From the 1920s to the present, Abingdon's population has steadily increased and, except for the period of the Great Depression, the town's economy has continued to prosper. While industries vital to the local economy at the beginning of the century have ceased operation or moved to other locations, they have been replaced by others such as the Norfolk and Western Railway and a thriving tourist industry which, with the town's continued importance as a commercial center and as the county seat have sustained the local economy.

In 1970 the Abingdon Historic District, encompassing buildings facing Main Street from Tanner Street to the Martha Washington Inn, was placed on the National Register of Historic Places. Town officials, community leaders, and private citizens in recent years have played important roles in preserving the town's architectural heritage. The Barter Theatre, Washington County Courthouse, Martha Washington Inn, and numerous private residences have been restored and rehabilitated and a local historic district zoning ordinance and architectural review board insures the protection of most of the town's historic architectural resources for future residents and visitors.

10. GEOGRAPHICAL DATA -- Verbal Boundary Justification

district includes mostly 19th-century residential, commercial, and municipal buildings. The Abingdon Historic District Extension primarily extends along Valley Street, a street parallel to Main Street, and is primarily comprised of original residential dwellings dating from the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Where possible small concentrations of historic buildings in areas contiguous to the original historic district were also added including mostly late 19th-century dwellings in the 300 and 400 blocks of East Main Street, mostly late 19th-and early 20th-century dwellings in the 100 and 200 blocks of West Main Street, and 19th-and early 20th-century dwellings on East Park, South Church, and Pecan streets. An important addition to the district is Sinking Spring Cemetery and William King High School at the western end of town. District boundaries conform to property lines of the cemetery and former school grounds. That portion of West Main Street south and east of the cemetery was excluded from the district because it contains a majority of modern commercial buildings. Residential areas north of King Street, north of Valley Street, north of the 200 block of Whites Mill Road, and the 300 block of Oak Hill Street are sporadically developed and contain mostly noncontributing dwellings. Much the same pattern of development is seen south of Troopers Alley and east of the 300 block of Valley Street, N.E. Noncontributing commercial buildings line the north side of the 300 and 400 blocks of East Main Street and on both sides of the street east of 418 East Main Street. Areas north and west of Sinking Spring Cemetery and William King High School primarily contain noncontributing residential and commercial buildings and were, therefore, excluded from the district extension. Boundaries of the district extension east and west of the southwestern corner of the original district conform to property lines of the Martha Washington Inn but exclude a parking lot to the south.
