DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located on a small rise amid the rolling hills of Rockbridge County, the Stone House is a two-and-one-half-story, gable-roof dwelling built in 1797 for Zachariah Johnston. The central-hall-plan structure is built of irregularly coursed, quarried limestone with wooden detailing throughout.

The main (east) facade consists of five bays and contains a rough-hewn, four-columned portico with pediment. The portico shelters a simply framed, transom-lit doorway--the main entry to the house. The surrounding fenestration consists of 9/6 hung sash contained within simple architrave window frames capped by plain stone jack arches. Sophistication in detail is provided by a wood modillion cornice found on the east and west facades. The corners of both facades are framed by stone quoins.

The rear (west) facade is similar to the front facade, with the exception of the central bay. The bay contains an asymmetrically placed second-floor window and first-floor rear entrance, both capped by jack arches.

The north facade contains twin exterior end chimneys. A full attic window is positioned between the chimneys. A portico-covered side entry is located on the north-west corner of the facade.

The two-bay south facade contains a stone interior end chimney, original to the house. A noteworthy feature below the chimney is a stone on the attic story carved with the date "1797"; the name of the first owner, Zachariah Johnston; and the name of the builder, John Spear. An enclosed passageway, of modern construction, leads to a one-story stone kitchen, original to the house.

The interior contains a double-pile, central-hall plan still retained throughout the house. The hall includes an open-string stair with a simply molded newel and plain balusters. Projecting from the hall are the main rooms, which preserve their simply finished woodwork and original fireplaces. The mantels display their original fluting and carved punch-work ornamentation.

The kitchen has been converted into the family dining room and retains its massive hearth and exterior wood trim.

The property is bounded on the east by Woods Creek, on the west by a line roughly paralleling the creek and on the north and south by lines running from the west line to the creek -- all encompassing the aforementioned features.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Located on the outskirts of Lexington in Rockbridge County, the Zachariah Johnston House is a handsome and well-preserved example of early stone architecture in the Shenandoah Valley. Built for politically successful Zachariah Johnston in 1797, the house reflects the prosperity of its first owner and talents of its builder, John Spear.

The land on which the house stands was once part of the Benjamin Borden tract of 1739 which consisted of 92,100 acres, "on the north-southeast branches of the James River between the Blue Ridge and the North Mountain". It was later acquired by Joseph Lapsley, Sr., in 1742 and sold by his heirs to Zachariah Johnston in 1795.

Born in Augusta County in 1742, Johnston was the son of William Johnston, a pioneer settler of the Valley. He was raised in the Presbyterian religion by his Scotch-Irish parents, who had left Northern Ireland seeking religious freedom. Johnston's vocation was farming, but he served as an officer in the Revolution and was a member of the Virginia convention to ratify the Federal Constitution. A presidential elector in 1789, Johnston cast his vote for General Washington.

Johnston served as a member of the House of Delegates, representing Augusta County for fourteen years and Rockbridge County for one term. His finest hour as a legislator came in 1785, when as chairman of the standing committee on religion, he spoke strongly for the bill to establish freedom of religion. The bill was passed on December 17, 1785. Johnston moved to Rockbridge County in 1790 and died there in 1800.

Architecturally, the house is notable as an example of formal house design rendered in the traditional stone construction. Although little is known of the builder, John Spear, the finely crafted walls are evidence of his skill as a master mason. The Johnston family homestead in Augusta County was built of stone in the 1730's, and it was to this material that Johnston turned when he had his new home erected in Rockbridge County. The pride of the new owner and builder may be surmised from the signed stone found on the south facade, bearing their names and the date of completion, 1797. This practice is rare in Valley stone houses. Noteworthy features of the interior are the simple wainscoting found throughout the house and the carved punch-work ornamentation executed on the mantels.

The Stone House has remained in the Johnston family and is presently owned by descendant Matthew W. Paxton, Jr.
