DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Peter Paul House is a two-story, two-bay Germanic house in southern Rockingham County. Built of log, the exterior of the house was stuccoed at an early date. The windows have late 19th-century 2/2 sash on the first floor and 2/2 and some original 6/6 sash on the second. The main door is in the east bay of the south facade. A 20th-century porch, replacing an earlier one, shelters the front and the west end, and a trap door in the floor of this porch provides access to the cellar under the western end of the house. The gable roof is covered with standing-seam sheet metal, and an ashlar limestone chimney rises near the center of the roof. To the rear is a three-bay brick ell, also covered with stucco. Built in 1829, it also has an interior chimney, a standing-seam sheet metal roof, and 2/2 and 6/3 sash. Glassed-in, one-story porches shelter both sides.

The original section to the Peter Paul House has a basic Rhenish Flurkuchenhaus plan. To the east of the central chimney is a Küche (kitchen) which runs the depth of the house. To the west of the chimney are a square Stube (parlor) in front and a narrow Kammer (chamber) in the rear. The stair is a modern one, rising in front of the chimney; the original stair apparently rose in the northwest corner of the Küche. The second-floor plan was originally the reverse of the first, with two rooms to the east and one to the west of the chimney.

The interior of the house has apparently been extensively changed, with plasterboard covering the walls and ceilings, but closer examination reveals that all of the original elements survive under this 20th-century work. All of the first-floor partitions enclose the original beaded boarding, and the doors leading from the Küche to the Stube and the Kammer--respectively a six-panel, raised-panel door and a battened door--are original. Two original partitions survive on the second floor, as do the Küche hearth, a second-floor chamber hearth, most of the original floors, and the original ladder stair to the attic.

Like most German houses, the structural elements were the only decoration, but two Federal-style mantels survive in the two-room ell. In the south room, the mantel has symmetrically molded pilasters supporting a three-panel frieze, with the whole surmounted by a thin shelf resting on an elegant reeded base molding. A similar mantel is used in the north room, except that the reeding is omitted and the pilasters are fluted.

Several outbuildings stand near the house including a concrete-block barn to the north and a frame garage to the northeast. All of these are of modern construction and have no architectural significance.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

The bounds are a rectangle formed by imaginary lines on the north and south, by State Route 701 on the west, and by the 1280' contour line on the east.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Peter Paul House, a log building near Dayton in Rockingham County, is one of a small group of Continental farmhouses surviving as relics of the heavy Swiss and German settlement in the Shenandoah Valley. Built on land purchased by Paul from the Harrison family, founders of nearby Harrisonburg, this central-chimney dwelling is also one of the latest and the furthest south of these European-derived houses.

Many of the Rockingham County records have been destroyed by fire, but it appears that the first European owner of the land on which the Peter Paul House stands was Daniel Harrison, who settled in the area in the mid-18th century. Peter Paul first appeared in the written records of the area in a listing in the Rockingham County Personal Property Tax Books of 1802 charging him with the ownership of four horses. In 1804 he was recorded as owning 120 acres of land, which increased to 187 acres in 1814 when it was listed as lying on a branch of Cook's Creek. Increases in these holdings over the next few years indicate that Paul acquired all of his tracts from Benjamin Harrison, an heir of Daniel Harrison.

Probably about 1810, but certainly before 1820, when the land tax records show a $250 valuation for buildings, Paul built a three-room, central-chimney log Flurkuchenhaus, a traditional house form in the Rhineland and in Switzerland. His house was atypical in being set on a flat site, rather than into a bank, the latter a characteristic siting of Germanic houses. Furthermore, houses of this type were rarely built in Virginia after 1800. The Peter Paul House may be the latest example now standing in the state.

In 1829 he added a two-room ell to the house, a standard form of addition to houses in the Valley. This construction increased the value of his buildings to $600. Paul died at mid-century, and the property was inherited by his sons. Now an unoccupied house on a working farm, the house is in need of renovation.
