Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Charlottesville and Albemarle County Courthouse Historic District is composed of approximately three hundred buildings. The traditional heart of the city's commercial, civic, and religious activities is found towards the center of the district, with early residential development and industrial sites located along the fringe. As proposed, the district encompasses all of the original 1762 township and its 1818 annexation as well as portions of the 1860 annexation. Contained within the district is the Albemarle County Courthouse Historic District, a two-block area placed on the National Register of Historic Places in June 1972. The district's boundaries have been determined through the use of prominent existing borders (i.e., the C&O right-of-way and McIntire Road), the presence of stylistic integrity, and/or historical precedent.

As viewed on a map, the northernmost section of the district is seen as a projecting arm terminating at Lyons Court and at the 250 Bypass. Middle and upper-middle-class residences extend along both sides of Park Street to Lyons Court. Similar houses are found interspersed on the northwestern side of Park Street between Lyons Court and the Route 250 Bypass; however, this area has been weakened by the recent construction of a large church unsympathetic in scale and quality to its neighbors. Houses on the northeastern side of Park Street, north of Lyons Court, are uniformly of post-1930 construction and not suitable for inclusion in the historic district at this time.

The eastern boundary for the district, below the Park Street appendage, is set on the western curb of Seventh Street. The area immediately west of Seventh Street maintains much of its late 19th-century character with only moderate post-1930 development. Houses worthy of note are to be found in the blocks east of Seventh Street but are sparsely scattered among parking lots and contemporary structures not compatible with the historic district.

A strong southern boundary is formed by following the line south and parallel to the C&O railroad right-of-way in part and Water Street in part. In this fashion, a four-city-block area of paved parking lots is excluded from the district (see sketch map).

The western boundary follows Saxton and Main streets to the intersection of High and Market streets with Preston Avenue and McIntire Road. Contained within the district's perimeter are Main Street commercial buildings, while to the west is vacant land from an urban renewal project. North of the Market/Preston intersection, the district boundary is delineated by McIntire Road and a steep, wooded hillside. All properties on Altamont Street, Altamont Circle, and North First Street are thus included.

An irregular route is followed by the northern boundary between McIntire Road and Park Street. Such a course roughly follows the pattern of development of the low-lying area between the higher elevations of Park Street and North First Street. The houses that are excluded are, for the most part, post-1930 builder houses.

The commercial core of the Charlottesville Historic District centers on a recently constructed, seven-block, pedestrian mall, designed by Lawrence Halprin. The mall is located on Main Street between Second Street NW and Seventh Street NE. Although most of the first-story facades have been altered to reflect the changing, contemporary tastes of the last fifty years, much of the original late 19th-century character of these two- to three-story brick buildings remains intact in the upper facades and cornices.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph) STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

Selected as the site of the Albemarle County Courthouse during the 18th century, Charlottesville served as an important regional political center. Growth was slow and dependent upon such factors as the founding of the University of Virginia in 1819, the coming of the overland railroad in 1848, and the development of street rail systems in 1887. In addition to the town's strong associations with Thomas Jefferson, the area is significant for its rich Revolutionary and Civil War history and for its diverse collection of 19th-century governmental, commercial, residential, and industrial architecture. Typical of many American 19th-century towns, Charlottesville contains the following distinct districts: a small courthouse square containing (in addition to the courthouse) several early 19th-century brick offices set about a small public green; a centrally located late 19th-century "main street" with numerous 20th-century modifications (malled in 1974-75); a turn-of-the-century railroad passenger station with industrial buildings clustered nearby; and several tangent residential neighborhoods, each stating progressions of development and the social status of its occupants. Though pocketed by demolition and urban renewal programs of the mid-20th-century and affected by remodelings unsympathetic to its historic fabric, Charlottesville contains a wide variety of 19th- and early 20th-century historic architectural styles. The buildings included in the Charlottesville and Albemarle County Courthouse Historic District reflect Charlottesville's economic, social, and architectural development; and, along with maintenance of the original town plan, they give the city its strong sense of historic continuity.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND :

Albemarle County, formed out of the western section of Goochland County in 1744,<sup>1</sup> was named for William Anne Keppel, second Earl of Albemarle and Governor of the Virginia Colony from 1737 to 1754. It was formally organized in 1745 with the placement of the county courthouse at Scott's Landing (present-day Scottsville) on the James River. The county underwent boundary reductions in 1761 and 1777 from which five counties and parts of two other counties were formed.<sup>2</sup>

As a result of the first land reduction, the county seat was moved to a more central location, and 1,000 acres of land were purchased from Colonel Richard Randolph in 1761. The site chosen was situated just west of the Rivanna River water gap through the Southwest Mountains and was on the Three Notch'd Road, the main route leading west to the Blue Ridge. This land was conveyed in trust to Dr. Thomas Walker of Castle Hill, who drew up the earliest deeds and offered prizes to encourage settlement.<sup>3</sup> On December 23, 1762, the General Assembly decreed, that fifty acres of land, contiguous to the courthouse of Albemarle county, have been lately laid off into lots and streets for a town, which would be of great advantage to the inhabitants of that county, if established a town for the reception of traders... That from and after the passing of this act the said fifty acres of land, so laid

Several city, county, and federal governmental buildings are found within the historic district and form the basis for an earlier National Register of Historic Places nomination (see: Albemarle County Courthouse Historic District). The previous district is approximately two blocks in area and is roughly bounded by Fourth, E. Jefferson, W. Park, and High streets. The Albemarle County Courthouse (1803 with 1859, 1865, and 1938 alterations, Georgian/Greek Revival) is the nucleus around which the city of Charlottesville developed. The courthouse and the courthouse office building (1939, Colonial /Georgian/ Revival) are both located in the Court Square area between High and Jefferson streets. These buildings form one point of a triangle of governmental buildings within the historic district. The other points of this triangle are the Charlottesville City Hall (ca. 1960, contemporary) on the northeastern end of the mall and the United States Post Office and Courts Building (1906, Classical Revival) on East Market Street.

Residential sections of the district are concentrated to the north and west. Recently many residences between Market and High streets have been converted to office space. Three distinctive residential areas within the historic district are Park Street, North First Street, and Altamont Circle/Altamont Street.

The Park Street area, between Lyons Court and Hedge Street, is composed of upper-middle-class residences. This four-block section of Park Street demonstrates mid- to late 19th-century strip development along a fashionable suburban street. These houses are set back from the street on large, well-maintained wooded lots; stone or iron fences often serve to accent these yards. Most of the houses appear to be architect designed with Federal, Italianate, Queen Anne, and Colonial Revival styles predominating.

The streetscape of Park Street changes south of Hedge Street as lot size decreases and building density increases. All houses on this part of Park Street have been converted from residences to offices. Although in excellent repair, some of these buildings have lost important architectural features, such as porches, during recent remodelings.

North First Street provides examples of a slightly later development -- late 19th century to early 20th century. The houses on North First Street are densely situated builder houses, with the exception of the Abell-Gleason House (ca. 1860, Greek Revival) at 521 North First Street. Styles include vernacular adaptations of Gothic Revival, Italianate, Queen Anne, and Colonial Revival.

The Altamont Circle/Altamont Street area, immediately to the west of First Street, is another distinctive residential area within the district. Probably the product of a single developer, these Colonial Revival builder houses (ca. 1915-1920) are strikingly similar in form and execution on both sides of Altamont Circle. The focal point of Altamont Circle is an unusual octagonal, five-story brick apartment building (1928).

Situated on the western slope of the prominent hill which Altamont Circle crowns, the eastern side of Altamont Street is slightly higher in elevation than the western side. As one stands on Altamont Street, a three-tiered development pattern is evident. The houses on Altamont Circle were built first, then the structures on the eastern side of Altamont Street, and finally, the buildings on the western side of the street were constructed. Taken as a whole, all three sets of houses work to make the Altamont Circle/Altamont Street area noteworthy.

The area between Water Street and the C&O railroad right-of-way contains both commercial and residential structures. Associated with the C&O railroad, and included in the district, are a number of commercial brick warehouses dating from the mid-19th century to the early 20th century, a four-story, wood-frame, mid-19th-century warehouse, and an early 20th-century Colonial Revival train station, now abandoned. The continuous line of warehouses that once ran along both sides of the railroad tracks between First Street and the train station is now interrupted by several parking lots (not included in the district).

Six religious buildings are found in the Charlottesville Historic District. Three Gothic Revival structures, each with a tall spire rising above the district's two- to two-and-one-half-story scale, are Christ (Episcopal) Church (1895-1898, 116 West High Street), First Christian Church (1897, East Market and First streets), and Beth Israel Synagogue (1882-1903, 301 East Jefferson Street). Other churches within the district include Holy Comforter Catholic Church (1925, 210 East Jefferson Street, Roman Revival), First Methodist Church (1924, 101 East Jefferson Street, Colonial Revival), and First Presbyterian Church (1955, 500 Park Street, Colonial Revival). The irregular form and scale of these buildings add to the district's varied skyline.

Also located within the historic district are: a former school building, a public library, and two small parks. The McGuffey School (ca. 1920, Colonial Revival), now the McGuffey Art Center, is located at 201 Second Street NW. The McIntire Public Library (1919-1922), with its semicircular portico with Corinthian columns and large multi-light fanlight above the door, at 220 Second Street NE, is an excellent example of Classical Revival architecture. The parks in the district are both one city block in size. The city's urban congestion is relieved by these green spaces with their colorful plantings and public benches. Lee Park contains an equestrian statue of Robert E. Lee, by Leo Lentelli, 1924; the equestrian statue of Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson, by Charles Keck, 1921, stands in the middle of Jackson Park.

The architectural styles within the district represent different periods of Charlottesville's development. These styles include examples of Federal, Gothic Revival, Greek Revival, Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, and Bungalow.

Many Federal-style buildings exist within the historic district and are concentrated on Court Square (see: Number Nothing /1823/). The Massie-Wills House (ca. 1825, 213-215 Fourth Street NE) and the Jones House at 109 East Jefferson Street are other examples of this style.

As noted above, the Gothic Revival style appears on several late 19th-century churches in the district. An example of residential Gothic Revival is the Perkins House (ca. 1850) at 433 North First Street.

The 1860 portico of the Albemarle County Courthouse is a late example of the Greek Revival style. The Levy Opera House (1852, 350 Park Street) has a raised basement and four pilasters supporting a Tuscan entablature and is also representative of Greek Revival in Charlottesville.

Several commercial Italianate buildings are located on the mall. Of these, 411-413 West Main Street (ca. 1890), with wooden keystones over window openings, prominent brackets, and molded surrounds, is one of the better examples. Other examples on the mall are located at 112, 205, 207 and 209 West Main Street. The Tower House (1854-1861, 408 Park Street) is an example of the residential Italianate.

Two of Charlottesville's best examples of the Queen Anne style are located on Park Street. These are the Marshall-Rucker House (1894, 620 Park Street) and the Duke House (1884, 616 Park Street). 501 Park Street has decorative leaded-glass windows, and 526 North First Street has excellent Queen Anne turned work on the porch.

The Colonial Revival style is the most prolific style within the Charlottesville Historic District. Some of the finest examples of this style are the First Methodist Church (1924, 101 East Jefferson Street), the Sterling-Lewis House (1923, 101 East High Street), the C&O train station (1905, Water Street), and the Watson House (1925, 515 Park Street) with its square portico with balcony and Ionic fluted columns.

Besides the refined McIntire Public Library, other examples of Classical Revival architecture are the U.S. Post Office and Courts building (1906) on East Market Street and the Virginia National Bank (1916) on the mall at 300 East Main Street.

Only a few Bungalow style houses are noted within the district. Two examples, 414 Altamont Street and 512 North First Street, are massive in form with porches typical of the style.

7. DESCRIPTION:

While the Charlottesville Historic District has not remained totally intact and free of modern development, most of the recent infill development has been sympathetic to the district's established style, material, and scale. Notable exceptions are the Charlottesville Towers Apartments on North First Street, the Thomas Tire Company (ca. 1975) on Water Street, Fidelity American Bank Building (ca. 1960) on the mall, and 415 Fourth Street, N.E. Several structures of architectural importance have been razed to make additional parking areas for the city's commercial and civic operations.

Overall, the Charlottesville Historic District retains many of the commercial, civic, and residential structures that were built during Charlottesville's formative years. Alterations that have occurred to these structures tend to have been sympathetic to the district. Parts of the district, such as the Park Street, North First Street, and Altamont Circle/Altamont Street areas, have been subjected to very few changes since their creation. While the Charlottesville Historic District has not been immune to change over time, it still possesses much of its early Virginia town character and maintains visible, functional links to Charlottesville of the past.

off as aforesaid, shall be, and are hereby established a town, to be called and known by the name of Charlottesville.<sup>4</sup>

Named after Queen Charlotte Sophia of Mecklenberg-Strelitz, wife of George III, Charlottesville was divided into twenty-eight squares with two half-acre lots per square: there were four east-west streets and five north-south streets.<sup>5</sup> At the first sale in September 1763, fourteen lots were sold to seven purchasers, ten more being sold in 1764. The residue, after twenty-three lots were sold in 1765, was divided into fifteen parts and sold as "outlots" for agricultural use by town residents.<sup>6</sup>

The town grew very slowly. Thomas Anburey, a British soldier sequestered outside of Charlottesville with 4,000 British and Hessian prisoners from Burgoyne's surrender at Saratoga, wrote in January 1779, "this famous place we had heard so much of consisted only of a court house, one tavern and about a dozen houses."<sup>7</sup> Only one building remains from around this time: the Butler-Norris House at 410 E. Jefferson Street (ca. 1785).

The Revolutionary War touched Charlottesville directly when in May 1781 the General Assembly adjourned from the capital at Richmond in order to reconvene at the Swan Tavern in Charlottesville. This move was undertaken to escape from General Cornwallis and his rapidly approaching troops. On June 3, 1781, Cornwallis dispatched Colonel Banastre Tarleton to Charlottesville with orders to capture the legislators, particularly Governor Thomas Jefferson and Delegate Patrick Henry. Jack Jouett, son of the proprietor of the Swan Tavern, came upon the British in Louisa County. Suspecting their intent, he rode forty-five miles through the countryside to Charlottesville where he warned the legislature in time so that the majority could retreat to Staunton. Tarleton, upon finding his mission in vain, burned the court records, stores, and ammunition. The Swan Tavern is now the site of the Redlands Club (ca. 1823, 300 Park Street); an oak tree under which Tarleton allegedly camped still survives on East High Street.

In 1790 the General Assembly authorized that twenty acres of land belonging to John Jouett be given to the trustees of the town to be divided into streets and half-acre lots. These lots were to be sold at public auction with the condition that a dwelling house, at least sixteen feet square with a brick or stone chimney, be built within three years.<sup>8</sup> There is no record that the town appropriated the land at this time, but in 1818 the area immediately north of the courthouse, known as Anderson's Addition, was annexed. In 1810 this post town had only grown to forty-five houses, a courthouse, a jail, and an academy.<sup>9</sup> In 1816 the General Assembly added twenty years to the time allotted for building a house on a town lot.<sup>10</sup>

Established as a county seat and trading center, Charlottesville had a courthouse from its earliest settlement. As county property, the courthouse was first located outside the town on the immediate northern edge and was not bordered by any streets. The intent was to reproduce an English green.<sup>11</sup> This situation proved impractical, and with the 1818 annexation the courthouse property was incorporated into the town proper. The two-story, brick rear wing of the present courthouse building dates from 1803, earlier structures having been of wood. The front portion was added in 1860 and the portico in 1870. The courthouse was also used for religious services in the absence of any church building in Charlottesville before 1826. Jefferson, James Madison, and James Monroe worshipped in this early "common temple."

Aiding Charlottesville's development during the early 19th century was Jefferson's Central College, chartered by the General Assembly in 1816.<sup>12</sup> A year later construction was begun on the first building. By shrewd management Jefferson transformed his small college into the University of Virginia, "an academic village", which was chartered by the Commonwealth in 1819.<sup>13</sup> Located one mile west of Charlottesville in the foothills of the Ragged Mountains, the University had from its start a profound impact on the physical and cultural growth of the town. The building of the University helped to ease the depression of 1819 and to spur commercial activity within Charlottesville. The University provided an additional source of income which has continued to the present day. The first session of the University opened in March 1825 with forty students and Thomas Jefferson as rector; in 1826 there were one hundred forty students.

Along with marking the opening of the University, the 1820s saw the establishment of the county's first newspaper, the Central Gazette (1820), and the building of the first church, Christ Episcopal Church, designed by Thomas Jefferson, (1825, 116 W. High Street, razed in 1895 for the present Gothic Revival structure). The Marquis de Lafayette visited in 1824 and saw a town inhabited by about six hundred persons with a courthouse, a half-finished church, and three or four taverns.<sup>14</sup> Four buildings remain from this period: 109 E. Jefferson (1814, Georgian), 213 7th (1820, Federal), 240-242 Court Square (1820, Federal), and 416 Park (1824, Federal).

In an age when water transport was crucial, Charlottesville, located on a small creek running into the Rivanna River, had no direct connection to the outside world. As a result, in the heyday of the canals and turnpikes, commercial and transportation activity passed to Scottsville to the south. However, due to its position as county seat and as the site of the University of Virginia, the town did not totally stagnate. In 1836 it could boast four churches, three large and commodious hotels, one tavern, two bookstores, two drugstores, twenty general mercantile stores, one girls' school, one boys' school, one preparatory school, a circulating library, a weekly printing office, numerous professions, a volunteer fire department, and "about 200 large and handsome houses, generally of brick construction."<sup>15</sup> The population stood at approximately 957. A number of large brick houses dating from this period remain, including: 422 N. 2nd (ca. 1839, Federal), 426 N. 2nd (ca. 1836, Greek Revival), 115 E. High (ca. 1835, Greek Revival), 222-224 Court Square (1830, Federal), and 307 E. Market (1853, Greek Revival).

The coming of the first railroad insured the continuation of Charlottesville's growth and brought the beginnings of industrial development. The first rail line of the Louisa Railroad Company, better known as the Virginia Central (now the Chesapeake and Ohio), entered Albemarle County in 1848, reached Charlottesville in 1850, and provided Piedmont to Valley service by 1852. After 1852 Charlottesville was also served by the Orange and Alexandria line, which used Virginia Central tracks as far as Gordonsville. By 1860 this line extended to Lynchburg. These railroads provided a reliable, constant, all-weather means of communication and transportation. One result, partially due to the influx of Irish railroad workers, was to increase the population from 1,890 in 1850 to 2,600 in 1853. The Statistical Gazetteer of 1855 describes Charlottesville as "a flourishing town" having four churches, two banks (Farmers Bank of Virginia and Monticello Bank)<sup>16</sup> and four newspapers.<sup>17</sup> A Greek Revival town hall was erected by a joint stock company in 1852 and provided room for lectures, concerts, and thespian productions (Levy Opera House, 350 Park Street). Gas became available for homes and offices in a restricted area in 1857, and the telegraph reached Charlottesville in 1860.

The growing changes in the town's stature were reflected in changes in its government. By an act of the General Assembly in 1801, Charlottesville was authorized to hold annual elections for five trustees, who were to maintain streets, settle boundary disputes, authorize a market, quiet public nuisances, appoint a town clerk, and collect taxes to total no more than $200.<sup>18</sup> In 1851 this government was changed to a mayoral form with a mayor, four aldermen, and a town sergeant assuming all powers and duties formerly held by Albemarle County magistrates within the town limits. These annually elected officials replaced the trustees and were authorized to pass ordinances relating to civic affairs and to tax up to $1,000.<sup>19</sup> Their sphere of influence increased when .271 square mile of land located around the center of town was annexed in 1860.

As with other Virginia cities, Charlottesville's growth was halted by the Civil War. During this period Charlottesville served as a Confederate hospital center. The town's wartime medical contributions are reflected in a letter appearing in the Richmond Examiner in August of 1861,

Charlottesville is now a vast hospital for the sick and wounded of our army. A more salubrious location for such a purpose could not well have been chosen, to say nothing of the warm-hearted and noble-minded people, whose highest pleasure and chief delight consists of ministering to the comforts and wants of our disabled soldiers.<sup>20</sup>

Medical facilities for the soldiers were first established at the University of Virginia; however, by 1862 it became apparent to the University administration that the institution's expanding medical role threatened the existence of the University as an academic institution.<sup>2</sup> As a result, three hospitals were established in the town of Charlottesville proper. These were Delevan, occupying the Delevan Hotel near the present Southern Railway Station; Midway, on the site of the present Midway Building; and the Monticello House on Market Street, destroyed by fire in 1862.<sup>22</sup>

Although Charlottesville saw little military action, the town was occupied from March 3 through 6, 1865, by General Sheridan's forces following the defeat of General Jubal Early near Waynesboro. During the occupation, General Sheridan established headquarters at the John Wood House (408 Park Street) and later at Mrs. Betsy Coles's home (522 Park Street, demolished 1969). Sheridan's staff, General Merritt and General Custer, were quartered in the Shackelford House (303 E. High Street) and the Farish House (The Farm, E. Jefferson Street).<sup>23</sup>

Maintaining pre-war trends, agriculture continued to dominate Charlottesville's economy in the post-war years. Although the economic instability associated with Reconstruction is evidenced by the number and frequency of land title turnovers, the region's agricultural sector grew significantly between 1870 and 1880. Census figures for the former record 824 farms, while the latter indicate an increase to 2,099.<sup>24</sup> The economic growth reflected in the agricultural sector was due in part to an influx of Northerners and Germans to the area. Period accounts record little community hostility to the new arrivals. Indeed, the new farmers were instrumental in the success of the area's emerging wine industry.<sup>25</sup>

The agricultural character of Charlottesville during the post-war years was recalled by W. W. Waddell in an account delivered to the Albemarle Historical Society in 1940:

The town was surrounded by about half a dozen large farms. On the northeast the Sinclair Estate ran up to High Street and down to the river, the section now known as Locust Grove. On the southeast and south the Brennan Estate and Mr. Slaughter Ficklin's farm ran to the C & O Depot. On the southwest was the Fife Estate which is now covered by Fifeville and ran up to the Southern Railroad. The Colonel T. L. Preston and Andrew J. Craven farms were on the northwest and north and extended to the old line of the Southern Railroad. This section is now Preston Heights and Rose Hill.

You were on country roads when you left East High Street, crossed the C & O Railroad, or left the foot of Beck's Hill, which after all were not much worse than the town streets....<sup>26</sup>

The industrial sector of the town also expanded during the 1870s. Major industries included the Charlottesville Woolen Mills, Monticello Wine Co., Hotopp's Wine Cellar, R. F. Harris & Son (farm implements), Charlottesville Milling and Manufacturing Co., two cigar plants, and two wagon and carriage factories.<sup>27</sup> Municipal growth was reflected in an 1873 land annexation of .340 square mile and the erection of the Albemarle County Jail (409 E. High Street) in 1875.<sup>28</sup>

Regional growth in the 1870s was influenced by the increasing importance of Charlottesville as a rail center. The economic rivalry with the canal town of Scottsville was resolved in favor of Charlottesville in the 1870s. The decade witnessed the expansion of two principal railroads, the Southern and the Chesapeake and Ohio. The intersection of these two lines divided the town into four sections and encouraged commercial expansion along these cross axes.

Municipal growth continued into the 1880s. In 1880 Charlottesville was formally chartered and a governmental system of twelve aldermen representing three municipal wards established. At the time the city was incorporated, Charlottesville covered an area of 781 acres<sup>29</sup> with a population of 1,676. A substantial professional population was represented. Residential patterns of the period were drawn along occupational lines. Lawyers and judges resided on Park Street and merchants lived on Ridge Street, while doctors settled along High Street.<sup>30</sup>

Much of the town's extant architecture dates from the period of Victorian prosperity. Residential and commercial structures reflect a local tradition of Victorian eclecticism and vernacular adaptation. Notable are the residential structures found along Park Street. Writing as early as 1874, James Alexander commented on this area's architectural character:

The residences on this street are built in good taste and their situations are lovely and picturesque, and are well calculated for persons of means and leisure. Doubtless, in time to come, the lands attached to these dwellings will be divided and subdivided to make room for other households.<sup>31</sup>

Despite Alexander's concern for the future of Park Street, the area has retained its architectural integrity over the years. Representative of this residential architecture are the 1884 Duke House (Queen Anne, 616 Park Street), the 1892 R. H. Wood House (Queen Anne, 743 Park Street), and the Marshall-Rucker House of 1894 (Queen Anne, 620 Park Street). Examples in the Gothic Revival and Italianate styles can also be found within the district boundaries. These include the Gothic Revival Perkins House (433 N. First Street) and commercial Italianate examples found on Main Street (112, 205, 207, 209, 411 Main Street).

Beginning with the 1890-91 state-wide economic expansion and continuing into the first decades of the 20th century, Charlottesville experienced a period of suburban real estate development. This development was fostered by transportation improvements and industrial promotion. The city's first street railway, the Charlottesville and University Street Railway Company, was incorporated by the General Assembly in March, 1887. Linking downtown with the University, the company began operation on June 11, 1887.<sup>32</sup> Influencing Charlottesville in a number of ways, the street railway encouraged residential development along its route, fostered further improvements in area transportation systems and, finally, opened opportunities for several local real estate development companies. The first of these companies was the Charlottesville Industrial and Land Improvement Company, organized in 1889.<sup>33</sup> This company was joined by a variety of other such organizations, including the Charlottesville West End Land Company (1890), the Development Company of Charlottesville (1890), the Belmont Land Company (1890), and the Jefferson Park Hotel and Land Improvement Company (1890).<sup>34</sup> The success of these development companies is reflected in population increases during the period. Records indicate a steady population increase from 1,676 in 1880 to 10,688 in 1920 to 15,245 in 1930.<sup>35</sup>

Since the 1920s Charlottesville has become conscious of the historical importance of its community. The dedication of Monticello as a public shrine in 1924, the centennial celebrations at the University of Virginia, and the influence of Colonial Williamsburg were factors influencing the town's historical awareness.<sup>36</sup>

This historical awareness is reflected in the number of Colonial Revival structures built during this period. Examples include the Watson House (1925, 515 Park Street) and the First Methodist Church (1924, 101 E. Jefferson Street).

The historical importance of the proposed district has been recognized by both private citizens and governmental agencies. Sympathetic renovation of older residential structures to commercial use has successfully expanded the district's commercial core, while maintaining established architectural patterns. Concern for the preservation of the town was incorporated into the Charlottesville City Code in 1976 with Article XVI which established the Historic Preservation and Architectural Design Control District. The target area of this legislation is within the boundaries covered by the National Register district. Generally, demolition within the district has been minimal. Exceptions to this can be found along the southern boundary in the railroad/industrial sector and along the 200 block of Jefferson which was demolished for a proposed high-rise development.

The area chosen for the National Register is important both for its historic character and architectural cohesion. The district contains structures representing the major historical, economic, and commercial stages of town development. It achieves architectural cohesion through scale (generally one to three stories) and similarity in building materials (predominantly brick followed by frame). Thus, the boundaries of the district delineate an organic urban form which is diverse yet unified.

Civil War monument to Virginians and 2 cannons in front yard. Historical: "When the county seat of Albemarle was moved in 1762, a small wooden structure was constructed as a court house. It was this building that briefly served as the capital of Virginia in May, 1781. This building was also used by Jefferson and Monroe during the early years of their law practices. This structure was replaced in 1803 by the existing north wing. Jefferson referred to this building as the "common temple" which served the four denominations in the town as a church. In 1859 the south wing was designed by W. M. Pratt and built by George Spooner. After the war the Ionic portico was installed and the Gothic towers removed." Historic Landmark Study, p. 53. The following documentation will amend the Charlottesville and Albemarle County Courthouse District Nomination to include the Confederate Memorial of Charlottesville and Albemarle County as a contributing object. The nomination did not include the Confederate Memorial although it was eligible for the National Register at the time.

Description:

The Confederate Memorial of Charlottesville and Albemarle County is a bronze lifesize figure of a Confederate soldier in uniform standing atop a classical granite pedestal that is placed directly in front of the Albemarle County Courthouse at the edge of East Jefferson Street on the Courthouse Square in Charlottesville. The memorial is shaded by the canopy of a large tree and surrounded by a dense hedge of Japanese Holly. It is flanked by a Napoleon gun on the east and west, and a small pile of cannon balls, set in concrete and stacked to form a pyramid, has been placed directly in front of the base on the south.

The figure of the soldier, one of several stock models that was available from the American Bronze Foundry Company of Chicago in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, is mustachioed and goateed in the fashion of the day and faces south over the center of 5th Street, carrying its rifle at waist level in "at ready" position. The butt of the gun is secured by the proper right hand and supported against the proper right hip while the barrel is held in the fingers of the proper left hand pointing slightly upward and toward the southeast away from the body. The ends of a blanket, rolled up and carried across the soldier's proper left shoulder, rest against the proper left hip, and a knapsack is slung across the proper right shoulder and rests on the proper left buttock. The figure is covered by a heavy green patina, the result of eighty-six years of exposure and oxidation, that is particularly notable where the features of the face have been highlighted so as to give it an almost skeletal appearance.

The pedestal of the memorial is approximately twelve feet tall, composed of seven blocks of granite, squared and placed on top of one another to form a classical cap, dado, and base. The granite, reported to have been quarried in Barre, Vermont, is a light pink color now moderately discolored by dirt and streaking from the oxidation of the bronze elements of the memorial.<sup>1</sup> Four Corinthian pilasters carved in high relief decorate the dado at each corner and flank inscriptions on all four sides of the pedestal while bronze plaques mounted on the base below the inscriptions are decorated with symbols that represent various divisions of the Confederate Army and the seal of the State of Virginia. Like the figure of the soldier, the plaques are oxidized and streaked with a greenish patina.

Prominent raised letters on the front or south side of the monument announce "1861 VIRGINIA 1865," and surmount a Confederate flag carved in low relief on the dado above a rectangular bronze plaque on the base depicting crossed cannons to represent the artillery. Elsewhere on the pedestal lettering is engraved into the stone. On the east side of the dado an inscription above a rectangular bronze plaque with crossed rifles to represent the infantry reads:

THE DAUGHTERS OF
THE CONFEDERACY
ALBEMARLE COUNTY

CHARLOTTESVILLE TO COMMEMORATE

"LOVE MAKES MEMORY ETERNAL"

On the north side a circular bronze plaque bearing the seal of the Commonwealth of Virginia on the base is beneath the inscription on the dado:

CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS
RIGHTS OF STATES

The west side of the base has a rectangular bronze plaque with crossed scabbards and a bugle to honor the cavalry and the inscription on the dado above it is:

YOUR DEVOTION TO DUTY;
YOUR FORTITUDE

Shortly after the Civil War, citizens and local governing bodies across the country began to honor their heroes and their dead with memorial statuary. The movement began in the North but spread South quickly once economic conditions permitted. Despite the widespread interest in such commemorative sculpture, it is of interest that Charlottesville and Albemarle County were among the last communities in Virginia to erect a monument. What would become a nine-year endeavor began in February of 1900 when Senator George W. Morris introduced Virginia State Senate Bill No. 475 providing that the governing bodies of Charlottesville and Albemarle County should have the authority to levy a special tax "for the purpose of erecting on the court house [sic] square at Charlottesville, a monument in commemoration of the Confederate soldiers of Albemarle County . . . " <sup>1</sup>

Though authorization was given, six years passed before the Albemarle County Board of Supervisors passed a resolution to impose a small tax, "the proceeds to be used for the erection of a Confederate monument." The city of Charlottesville decided not to levy a tax and instead appropriated $600 from the general revenues of the city for the memorial.<sup>2</sup>

Shortly after the county tax levy was passed, a seventeen-member monument committee was formed of representatives from the city and county, the Albemarle Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and the John Bowie Strange Camp of Confederate Veterans.<sup>3</sup> When the county tax and the city cash contribution did not produce a sufficient sum to purchase a monument in the style hoped for, this group instigated a flurry of fund-raising activities that included unsuccessful efforts to get each child in the city and county to donate ten cents, and a tea and musical at the Meadow Creek Country Club that was more profitable.<sup>4</sup> As soon as their goal of $500 was met, the committee solicited designs for the memorial from three firms.<sup>5</sup> A proposal submitted by Charles R. Walsh of the Cockade Marble Works of Petersburg, Virginia was eventually selected.<sup>6</sup>

Some changes in the plan were made by committee members during the next few months. Whether for this reason or because of a miscalculation, the finances in hand were found to be insufficient to cover the projected costs of the monument as redesigned. The Daughters of the Confederacy promptly arranged a minstrel show at the Levy Opera House to cover the shortfall. The event was well attended and netted an additional $105.<sup>7</sup>

The dedication ceremony had been scheduled for 3 June 1908, the 100th anniversary of Jefferson Davis's birthday, but Walsh informed the committee in late May that the monument would not be ready in time, claiming that the foundry had not prepared the bronzes on schedule. The committee expressed its disappointment at missing the anniversary of Davis's 100th birthday, but set another dedication date in October.<sup>8</sup>

The record is not clear why the Charlottesville City Council waited until 14 August, barely two months from the rescheduled dedication, to adopt a resolution expressing their desire that the monument be placed on the "triangular area in front of the Midway School" at the juncture of Ridge and Main Streets rather than in front of the courthouse. Within a few days, when the local newspaper, the Daily Progress, supported the idea in an editorial, a major controversy broke out.<sup>9</sup> The general membership of the Daughters of the Confederacy strongly favored the move; the Board of Supervisors of Albemarle County were against it; and other prominent members of the community let their opinions pro and con be known. Before the matter could be resolved, however, the Daily Progress headlined an announcement on 9 September that the Cockade Marble Works was bankrupt. The accompanying article explained that debts had forced the company into receivership, and informed the shocked community that the granite for the Charlottesville monument had never even been quarried.

The Monument Committee lost little time in selecting another contractor, signing an agreement this time with the Kyle Granite Company of Washington, D. C.<sup>10</sup> This firm was to supply a monument with a classical granite pedestal topped by a bronze figure of a Confederate soldier in "at ready" position. The American Bronze Foundry Company of Chicago was to have provided the same figure for the Walsh Company and, except for a few differences in the pedestal, the new monument would be identical to the one ordered earlier.<sup>11</sup>

During the late-nineteenth-and early-twentieth centuries, Civil War monuments were manufactured in large numbers for communities in the North and South. The American Bronze Foundry Company, like many foundries of the period, commissioned the services of unidentified sculptors who prepared life-sized figures in the uniforms of both sides in several poses. Communities around the country could choose from a number of models that were easily cast to order.<sup>12</sup>

The American Bronze Foundry Company left few records, but advertising in periodicals such as The Confederate Veteran show that the company was formed in 1888. Its "at ready" figures like the one in Charlottesville, can be found in the communities of Farmville, Virginia, and Edenton, Fayetteville, Lexington, Louisburg, Oxford, and Shelby, North Carolina.<sup>13</sup>

When the agreement with the Kyle Granite Company was finalized, arguments about the location of the statue resurfaced. Matters came to a head at the second of two meetings held by the Monument Committee in early December of 1908. A vote of the thirteen members attending the meeting would overwhelmingly have favored the Midway Park location, but it was established that the issue had technically been settled by law. Language in the act of the General Assembly had specified that the tax authorized to finance the monument was "for the purpose of erecting [it] on the court house [sic] square at Charlottesville."<sup>14</sup>

By mid-January 1909, the Kyle Granite Company informed the committee that the memorial would arrive shortly, and one month later, the Albemarle County Board of Supervisors ordered the removal of a watering trough in front of the monument site at the courthouse.<sup>14</sup> Through efforts of congressmen representing the area, the federal government donated two Napoleon cannons for placement at either side of the memorial, and the Southern Railway agreed to ship them free of charge.<sup>15</sup> These particular cannons had been manufactured in New England, but they were of a type widely used by both sides during the conflict and regarded as the "workhorse of Civil War artillery."<sup>16</sup>

The long-awaited monument arrived in Charlottesville on 10 March 1909. Within a week, it was erected over a copper box that contained a number of records and items that were important to the community. Among them were lists of living and deceased members of local Confederate organizations; two Confederate notes, one for fifty and the other for five dollars; a pamphlet containing the ordinances of the City of Charlottesville; a history of the University of Virginia; a history of Albemarle County; and post cards with illustrations of Charlottesville, the University of Virginia, and Monticello.<sup>17</sup> A brief entry made in the Chancery Orders Book 19 of Albemarle County records that; "1909, On Wednesday, March 17th at 5 o'clock P. M. the statue of the Confederate Soldier in bronze was completed and stands in court house [sic] yard fronting the middle of 5th street looking south."<sup>18</sup>

Mayor E. G. Haden scheduled the dedication ceremonies on 5 May 1909 after the Napoleon guns were expected to arrive. The occasion was both a solemn and festive city and county holiday. J. H. Lindsay, editor of the Daily Progress described the crowd that assembled for the unveiling of the memorial as one of the largest ever seen in Charlottesville. As the canopy draped over the statue was drawn aside, the Monticello Guards fired a single salute which was followed by a thirteen gun salute from the Napoleon cannons which had been placed on the east and west of the monument. Afterward, Representative Samuel W. McCall of Massachusetts, the featured speaker, gave a touching tribute to General Robert E. Lee and the Virginia troops, stating that if the Union could not be overthrown by the courage and leadership they evidenced during the Civil War, then it would likely remain strong forever.<sup>19</sup> Thus, the Confederate Memorial remains where it was erected eighty-six years ago, in front of the historic Albemarle County Court House, to memorialize the soldiers in gray from Charlottesville and Albemarle County who lost their lives during the Civil War.
