7. Description

SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

Set approximately four blocks west of the Suffolk Historic District, the West End is a residential neighborhood located within the City of Suffolk. The West End neighborhood is roughly bounded by the Seaboard Coast Line Railroad to the north, the Norfolk & Western Railroad (N & W) to the south, Linden Avenue, Wellons Street and Pender Street to the east, and Brewer Street and Causey Avenue on the west. The streets are laid out in a perpendicular grid pattern fronted by long rectangular housing lots. Linden Avenue is unique in that it is the widest street within the West End neighborhood and the only street divided by a landscaped median. The wood-frame and masonry dwellings are set back from the roads with sidewalks and landscaped yards buffering them from the public right-of-ways. Nearly all of the lots have driveways and freestanding garages.

The majority of the buildings in this neighborhood date from the last decade of the 19th century through the first four decades of the 20th century, and display the fashionable architectural styles of the period in which they were constructed. There are a few examples dating from the third quarter of the 19th century that proceed the area's major period of development. The dominant forms and styles, albeit vernacular, include Italianate, Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Tudor Revival, Bungalow/Craftsman, and American foursquare. Single-family dwellings dominated the area initially with a few multiple-family dwellings beginning to appear in the second quarter of the 20th century. The West End neighborhood is also home to several churches and some early- and late-20th-century commercial development.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION

Early Development (1860 – 1899)

Dating from circa 1860, the earliest surviving dwelling within the West End neighborhood is located at 504 West Washington Street. Set near the road on a level grassy lot the dwelling is partially hidden from view by mature trees and shrubs. Built in the Greek Revival style, the original central block of the building is two-and-a-half stories in height and three bays wide with an imposing full-width front gabled portico. The stuccoed façade features a central entry set in a pedimented surround with a 15-light transom and sidelights, and large double-hung wood sash windows. Detailing on the portico includes dentil molding and a half-round window with a keystone arch. In the 1930s, one-story wings were added to the east and west sides of the dwelling. The original outbuildings, including a kitchen, servants quarters, and a well house, have been attached to the dwelling by a series of hyphens.

The Italianate style, defined by an overall emphasis on verticality, is illustrated on about thirteen examples within the district, all of which date to the last quarter of the 19th century. The West End contains suburban vernacular versions of the Italianate style which display only select embellishments such as eave brackets. The houses located at 520 and 528 West Washington Street (both dating to circa 1880) appear similar and may have been constructed by the same builder. These two houses are square in plan, two stories in height, and three bays wide with a side entry. Both have double-pile plans with full-width hipped-roof porches across the façades and exhibit applied eave brackets. Square wood columns ornamented with lace-like or scroll-shaped brackets support the porches. The façade windows have double-hung vertical 2/2 sash. Further examples of the Italianate style can be seen at 116 Pender Avenue (circa 1870), 616 West Washington Street (circa 1870), and 530 West Washington Street (circa 1880).

Dating from the last quarter of the 19th century, the dwellings located at 105-107 Linden Avenue are representative of early forms of the Colonial Revival style. Both structures are single pile with side gable roofs, cornice returns, weatherboard siding, and 6/6 double-hung sash windows. The house at 107 Linden Avenue (circa 1880) is three bays wide with a central passage and two interior end brick chimneys, whereas the dwelling at 105 Linden Avenue (circa 1880) is two bays wide with a hall/parlor plan, and one interior end brick chimney.

The Queen Anne style, favored throughout the nation for everything from rowhouses to sprawling seaside retreats, is one of the more prolific architectural expressions in the West End neighborhood. Typical examples of this style nationwide were resplendent in patterned shingles, spindles, brackets, and curlicue cutouts; many boasted ample verandahs, turrets, and sleeping porches. During the latter part of the 19th century, the Queen Anne style found an exuberant expression in wood, and frequently incorporated columns and decorative motifs borrowed from our own colonial architecture. Yet, the traditional architectural detailing of the Queen Anne style was easily reinterpreted with only select embellishments applied. The intricate form commonly associated with the Queen Anne style was often the only identifiable element of the fashion. This vernacular interpretation of the style was distinctly prominent in the West End neighborhood. These buildings, dating primarily from the 1890s up to 1915, are significant examples of the fast growing residential development of the neighborhood. There are several resplendent high-style examples in addition to the more vernacular forms noted in West End, particularly along Linden Avenue at 124, 120, and 117 Linden Avenue, all of which date to circa 1895. Modest examples of the Queen Anne style can also be found on neighboring streets at 116 South Broad Street (circa 1895), 125 St. James Avenue (circa 1900), and 201 Bosley Avenue (circa 1895), to name a few.

20th Century Development (1900 – 1939)

After the turn of the 20th century, traditional domestic forms were often interpreted for economy and convenience. The resulting bungalow mimicked the plan and massing traditionally associated with the fashionable Queen Anne style; yet, the bungaloid form was invariably one to one-and-a-half stories in height. Overwhelmingly known as a style rather than a form, the bungalow is covered by a low-pitched, intersecting gable roof that encompassed the often wrapping porch. The irregular plan allowed for additional window openings and direct access to the porch from various secondary rooms. The modest arrangement of the wood-frame buildings made them one of the most popular low- to middle-income domestic forms in growing suburban communities across the United States. The bungalow, very often melding with the Craftsman-style, is seen predominantly on Brewer Avenue with several examples on St. James Avenue and Linden Avenue, all of which retain their integrity. Stylistic elements displayed include raised brick foundations, battered wood posts on masonry piers, full-width front gable porches, exposed rafter tails, eave brackets, and double-hung windows with multi-light upper sash above a one-light lower sash. Early 20th century examples include 111 Linden Avenue (circa 1905), 134 Brewer Avenue (circa 1910), and 127 Brewer Avenue (circa 1910). The majority of the bungalows in West End date to the 1920s and include 711 West Washington Street (circa 1920), 116 Brewer Avenue (circa 1920), 302 South Broad Street (circa 1925), and 106 St. James Avenue (circa 1925).

Another of the popular building forms of the early 20th century was the American foursquare, commonly ornamented with Colonial Revival- and Craftsman-style detailing. The two-story, four-room-per-floor house plan without a hall is a much-used concept that refers to the hall/parlor plan of the 18th century. Numerous illustrations of the American foursquare exhibiting architectural detailing fashionable in the early part of the 20th century have been documented in the West End, particularly in the eastern portion of the neighborhood. The buildings have the characteristically distinguished two-story height, hipped or pyramidal roof with pronounced eaves and dormers that light an extra half-story, large front porch, and the lack of applied exterior ornament. The overall shape of the buildings is a cube and the main entry openings are located off-center. Examples dating to circa 1910 are located at 308 South Broad Street, 213 Linden Avenue, and 205 Bosley Avenue. Built circa 1925, 311 South Broad Street features Craftsman-style details. The dwelling features overhanging eaves, exposed rafter tails and a porch with battered wood posts on masonry piers.

The Colonial Revival style proved to be a significant contribution throughout the West End neighborhood in the first half of the 20th century. The Colonial Revival-style buildings found in this district range from the large high-style dwellings to the more restrained vernacular houses. Characteristic features of the style include a rectangular form, projecting porticos, cornice returns, open pediments, Tuscan columns, and either wood-frame or brick construction. High-style examples in the West End typically are five bays wide with three front gable dormers and two interior-end chimneys. Several examples include an ornate entablature with a triglyph and metope frieze. High-style examples can be seen at 212 South Broad Street (circa 1925) and 706 Gittings Street (1929). The modest vernacular illustrations of this style are three bays wide with side gable roofs and a projecting portico, or have a T-shaped footprint with a wrap-around one-story porch. Some of these houses have infused Queen Anne and Craftsman details. Examples of the more vernacular form of Colonial Revival can be seen at 316 Causey Avenue (circa 1925), 120 St. James Avenue (circa 1930), and 309 Linden Avenue (circa 1930).

Another of the early-20th-century styles is the Classical Revival, represented in the neighborhood by the dwelling located at 104 South Broad Street. Built in 1907, this two-and-a-half-story, stretcher-bond brick house is three bays wide featuring a full-width two-story Classical Revival porch with a center forward extension supported by fluted Corinthian columns and pilasters with a balustrade roofline. The house exhibits three-bay-wide projecting cross gables on the side elevations with full denticulated pediments and center semi-circular windows. An ornate heavy wood cornice wraps around the hipped-roof dwelling. A balcony is set above the central entry on the façade and the entry is comprised of a two-leaf glass-and-paneled door with an elliptical transom and patterned multi-light tracery sidelights. The windows and entry openings have flat arch lintels with keystones and the original windows on the side and rear elevations are double-hung with a nine-light upper sash over a one-light lower sash. The inset rectangular panels between the stories and window bays are decorated with inset brick and stone designs.

Built in the late 1920s the dwelling at 122 Brewer Avenue is the only Tudor Revival-style dwelling within West End. As with many of the other styles represented in the neighborhood, this building is a modest example of the style delineating itself only through the footprint and roof shape. The dwelling is a large two-story masonry structure with steeply pitched gables, a T-shaped footprint with dominant projecting front gables, inset gable-front wall dormers, and double-hung windows with eight-light sash.

During the late 1920s and early 1930s, a few multiple dwellings in the form of duplexes and twin dwellings, began to appear in the West End neighborhood. The duplexes, located at 606 Virginia Avenue (circa 1924), 314 Bosley Avenue (circa 1925), and 305 Linden Avenue (circa 1935) are rectangular wood-frame buildings, two stories in height, with hipped roofs and two-story porches. These dwellings lack ornamental details but exhibit central and side entrances and paired sets of double-hung wood sash windows. The West End neighborhood contains two twin dwellings, 400-400 ½ and 402-402 ½ South Broad Street, both constructed circa 1935. These Colonial Revival-style twin dwellings are two stories in height and four bays wide with symmetrical facades, side gable roofs, interior-end brick chimneys and front gabled porticos.

Most of the residential properties contain one or more outbuildings such as garages or sheds. The majority of the surviving outbuildings were built during the first quarter of the 20th century. In general these buildings are one story in height, two to three bays wide and exhibit a square or rectangular footprint, wood-frame construction clad in weatherboards, with shed, gable, or pyramidal roofs sheathed in asphalt shingles or standing seam metal. Decorative details include wide eaves and exposed rafter tails.

Examples can be seen throughout the neighborhood including the properties at 102 Brewer Avenue (circa 1930), 210 South Broad Street (circa 1920), and 107 Wellons Street (1910-1925). Outbuildings dating to the second half of the 20th century display the same form as their predecessors but feature more modern materials such as concrete block, aluminum siding, and vinyl siding.

Religious and Commercial Resources in West End

In addition to the domestic buildings throughout West End, there are also religious and commercial buildings. Historically commercial development within the West End neighborhood concentrated in the area between Virginia Avenue and the Norfolk & Western Railroad and involved industries reliant on the railroads for the shipment of their products. According to the Sanborn Maps from 1920 and 1926, there was a hardware and lumber store, a casket company and a mattress company. The structure which housed the Suffolk Mattress Company in 1920, survives today at 401 Linden Avenue (circa 1915). The one-story, six-bay brick building is now vacant. The building does not feature any stylistic elements except for a stepped parapet which hides the flat roof. A brick addition was constructed in the northeast corner of the building during the second half of the 20th century. North of Virginia Avenue, the West End neighborhood was historically predominantly residential, but there remains at least one example of a combination store/dwelling from the early 20th century. This structure is located at 700 West Washington Street (circa 1900) towards the western edge of the district. Typical of the commercial/residential building types is the gable front with a recessed center entrance flanked by store windows, a long rectangular plan, and a side entrance to the second-story apartment. During the last twenty years of the 20th century West Washington Street has been transformed into a commercial street serving the residents of the West End neighborhood as well as the residents of downtown Suffolk. A number of residential buildings along West Washington Street, which is the main western thoroughfare from the Downtown Historic District, have been rehabilitated during the last fifty years to serve as commercial buildings. This includes 528 West Washington Street (circa 1880) and 711 West Washington Street (circa 1920). Both of these buildings were constructed as single family dwellings and have since been converted into offices.

There are several religious structures located in West End. One of the most impressive, the Oxford Methodist Episcopal Church, now the Oxford United Methodist Church, is located at 601 West Washington Street. Constructed in 1922, in the Gothic Revival style, the brick building has a Greek cross plan. It features crenellated corner towers topped with pinnacles, large lancet windows with cast concrete hood molds and surrounds, shallow wall buttresses, and a parapet gable roof. The church at 501 West Washington Street, built in 1938, houses the West End Baptist Church. Built in the Colonial Revival-style, the church has a symmetrical façade, central entrance, double-hung wood sash windows and a central steeple covered with copper and topped with a finial. Not all the churches within the West End neighborhood exhibit such high-style detailing. The building at 509 Smith Street, built in 1908, housed the Oxford Methodist Episcopal Church for fourteen years. The rock-faced concrete block building has a brick façade which features a central entry and double-hung wood sash windows. In 1922 it was converted to an apartment building.

Development After 1939

By 1939 the West End neighborhood was nearly complete with only a handful of residential buildings erected on empty lots after 1940. These buildings, generally located along the western and southern boundaries, consist of duplexes and single-family dwellings. The duplexes, dating to the late 1940s, have a rectangular form and are two stories in height and three bays wide. Lacking ornamental detailing, the duplexes are wood-frame construction and clad with either vinyl siding or a brick veneer and capped with a hipped roof. Two-story front porches with square wood posts and half-hipped roofs serve both the first- and second-story residents. A few single-family dwellings were also added along the western and southern borders during the late 1950s. These vernacular brick dwellings are generally one story in height with a L-shape form and cross gable roofs. In-fill housing consisting of one-story vernacular single dwellings and two-story rectangular Colonial Revival-style apartment blocks in West End continued to be built through the last quarter of the 20th century, resulting in only a small number of new buildings.

The West End neighborhood has also experienced a limited amount of commercial development during the last half of the 20th century. This development is contained along the western blocks of West Washington Street and is composed of two commercial buildings, three offices, and one bank. Both the commercial buildings, located at 519 and 608 West Washington Street, were constructed during the third quarter of the 20th century. The building at 519 West Washington Street is representative of the Commercial style and is clad with a brick veneer and features fixed metal plate glass windows and a side-gable roof. During the last twenty years of the 20th century, the three office buildings (607, 705, and 709 West Washington Street) and the bank at 611 West Washington Street were built. The office buildings reflect a more modern interpretation of the Colonial Revival style and exhibit features such as brick veneers, recessed central entries, double-hung vinyl sash multiple-light windows with rowlock sills and gauged lintels, and gable roofs. The bank, which currently serves as the Word of Faith Worship Center, and the commercial building at 608 West Washington Street are vernacular and display materials popular in commercial construction during the second half of the 20th century, such as concrete foundations, brick veneers, metal window sashes, and flat roofs.

Primary Resource Information: Single Dwelling, Stories 2.5, Style: Colonial Revival, ca 1925

This Colonial Revival-style dwelling is two-and-a-half stories in height and three bays wide. It has a solid stretcher-bond brick foundation supporting a masonry structural system with brick laid in a 6-course Flemish bond. The symmetrical façade features a central entrance set in a molded wood surround with dado panels and 10-light side-lights. Double-hung wood sash 6/6-light windows with wood lug sills flank the entrance and are repeated in the second story. The dwelling has a molded wood cornice, wide eaves, and a side gable roof which is covered with asphalt shingles. Two gabled dormers, clad in asbestos shingles and containing double-hung wood sash 6/6-light windows, rise from the roof. One exterior-end brick chimney is positioned on the south elevation and a second interior chimney stands in the northeast corner of the house. The one-story, one-bay portico features paired wood

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The West End neighborhood in the City of Suffolk, Virginia, is significant as a residential community that grew to support the city's commercial downtown and surrounding industrial areas. The West End is a late-19th- and early-20th-century residential neighborhood improved by large-scale high-style dwellings and modest vernacular housing, as the market demanded. The various levels of economic status are illustrated in the built fabric constructed to serve not only the middle- and upper-class residents of the City of Suffolk, but also the blue-collar industrial workers. The middle- to upper-class housing is generally of an earlier construction date and located within one to two blocks of West Washington Street, whereas the sections northwest of West Washington Street and south of Smith Avenue are of a later date and contain smaller modest dwellings.

The neighborhood consists of a grid-shaped pattern bounded on the north and south by separate railroad lines that run east and west through the City of Suffolk. The housing blocks in West End are both rectangular- and square-shaped, laid out on a grid, denoting a systematic street plan completed in several stages by the end of the first decade of the 20th century. Linden Avenue, Wellons Street, and Pender Street mark the eastern boundaries, while the western boundary is marked by Brewer Avenue, Causey Avenue, South Broad Street and Bosley Avenue. The north and south boundaries are delineated by the railroad tracks of the Seaboard Coast Line Railroad, originally called the Seaboard Air Line Railroad, and the Norfolk & Western Railroad, respectively.

Eligible under criteria A and C of the National Register of Historic Places, the West End Historic District has a period of significance extending from 1865 to 1939, and reflects the themes of architecture and community planning and development. The neighborhood consists of 234 properties with 397 resources including 199 single dwellings, 20 multiple dwellings, 5 churches, 5 commercial buildings, 1 mixed domestic and commercial building, 1 bank, 3 office buildings, 1 funeral home, and 162 secondary resources such as garages and sheds. In all, there are 286 contributing resources and 111 non-contributing resources within the West End.

Criterion A: That are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.

West End meets Criterion A of the National Register of Historic Places as a community which developed to support the growing upper-, middle-, and working-class populations during the last half of the 19th century and first four decades of the 20th century. The development and expansion of various local industries during this time period necessitated the westward expansion of the City of Suffolk and the creation of the West End neighborhood. Pre-20th-century development within West End supported the middle- to upper-class population that was steadily moving away from the downtown area and occurred along, or within close proximity to West Washington Street. Further south and north of West Washington Street lots were improved during the 20th century to house the lower-income employees of the factories and local businesses. West Washington Street, which provides easy access to and from the manufacturing industries and the downtown business district, as well as West End's proximity to the industrial and business centers, made it an ideal location for business owners and employees alike.

Criteria C: That embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or that represent the work of a master, or that possess high artistic values, or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction.

The residential neighborhood of West End meets Criterion C of the National Register of Historic Places for its substantial concentration of domestic architecture of the late 19th and early 20th century. Dwellings within the neighborhood represent the Greek Revival, Italianate, Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, and Craftsman styles that were popular during the period. The earliest houses are generally imposing in scale and massing and represent high-style examples of these fashionable styles. As the population of Suffolk grew, residential construction in West End increased and house sizes and styles began to change in response to a new clientele. Many of these later modest dwellings exhibit American foursquare or bungalow forms with Queen Anne- or Colonial Revival-style detailing.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

City of Suffolk

The City of Suffolk, established in 1742, is ideally located along the waterways of Lake Kilby, Lake Meade, the Nansemond River and Shingle Creek. The original town consisted of fifty acres of land based at the location of John Constant's tobacco warehouse. The access to major waterways proved essential to the commercial success of the town. By 1748, ferries connected Suffolk to the neighboring towns of Norfolk and Southampton, and by the eve of the Revolutionary War (1775-1781) Suffolk was a prospering commercial center relying on trade in lumber, tar, turpentine, staves, shingles and other by-products that could be extracted from nearby Dismal Swamp. During the Revolutionary War, the British destroyed the prospering commercial center in Suffolk, which was soon rebuilt. The majority of the earliest buildings in this area, known as "Old Town," are Federal-period wood-frame dwellings with a commercial enclave that was centered along Main Street. A fire destroyed most of Suffolk in 1837, prompting a second period of rebuilding that moved beyond Old Town to an area known as "Up Town." The main trade in Suffolk during the 19th century continued to focus on the lumber industry, while the more rural county trade was dedicated to the production of grains and other agricultural products. Between 1819 and 1822, steamboat lines between Suffolk, Norfolk, and Smithfield were opened and continued to operate until the turn of the 20th century. In 1835, Suffolk received the first of its six railways, the Seaboard Air Line, connecting Suffolk to Portsmouth and Wealdon, North Carolina.¹ With the advent of the railways, Suffolk's prominence as a manufacturing and exporting town was established.

Suffolk's railroads and steamships made it an attractive prize during the Civil War (1861-1865). In May 1862, the town of Suffolk was surrendered to Union forces which held the town until the summer of 1863.² On April 11, 1863, 20,000 Confederate troops under Lieutenant General James Longstreet attacked the town in an attempt to re-capture Suffolk and re-establish the railways. The failed siege ended on May 4, 1863, when Longstreet withdrew his troops in an attempt to aid Robert E. Lee in Chancellorsville.³ During the Union occupation, troop encampments were set up in the fields to the east, south and west of the town, including the area which would subsequently become the West End neighborhood.⁴

Suffolk experienced a steady growth in population during the Reconstruction period. Real estate development increased beyond Old Town and Up Town to the east and west of Main Street, with four new streets created to meet the growing residential demands of immigrating upper-class citizens. This second addition to Suffolk's central core was known as "New Town" and included some of the town's most elaborate and large-scale residences.

The Evolution of West End

With the end of the Civil War, the citizens of Suffolk began to rebuild their town, farms and industries. The town of Suffolk as well as Nansemond County recovered quickly and between 1870 and 1880, the county's population increased by 33% from 9,000 to 15,903.⁵ To accommodate the growing population Suffolk's town limits were expanded in 1879.⁶ The earliest structure within the West End neighborhood was constructed soon after the conclusion of the Civil War. Located on the north side of West Washington Street (known at the time as Kilby Street) between Brewer Avenue and Pender Street, the dwelling stands on a square lot with numerous service buildings which have subsequently been attached to the main dwelling by the construction of numerous hyphens. Between 1870 and 1890, a scattering of dwellings were erected within West End. These high-style dwellings reflect Italianate and Queen Anne styles and appear to have been constructed for the upper-class citizens of Suffolk who wished to live on the outskirts of town.

By 1890, Suffolk had fully recovered from the devastating economic effects of the Civil War, and had begun to show signs of a new age of prosperity. In 1891, the town's first electrical plant was constructed and in 1895, telephone service was begun. By 1898, several streets of the West End neighborhood had been platted. Linden Avenue, St. James Avenue, and Wellons Streets were laid out consecutively in a north-south direction parallel to Broad Street, which is a significant thoroughfare for this area as it provides access northward across the rail lines to the Nansemond River. Other than Kilby Street (now Washington Street), Smith Street is the only other east-west route in the neighborhood by 1898, terminating at its intersection with Broad Street. Town limits noted on the 1898 map stretch to the west side of Linden Street, but they do not include Broad Street.⁷

By 1903, West End had grown to include approximately fifty buildings, the majority of which were clustered along West Washington Street with a few dwellings positioned on Wellons Street, St. James Avenue, Linden Avenue, South Broad Street, and Brewer Avenue. These buildings represent Italianate, Queen Anne, and Colonial Revival styles. The two-story dwellings, which display rectangular and L-shape footprints, were set near to the streets with freestanding service buildings located to the rear of the rectangular lots. The first inhabitants of these dwellings were generally employed as merchants, lumber dealers, and treasurers.⁸

In 1900, Suffolk was the terminus for six railroad lines transporting people and freight daily to and from Suffolk. Tied to the growth of the railroads was the development of over one hundred industries within the Suffolk area. These industries included but were not limited to: peanut factories, lumber mills, iron foundries, woodworking establishments, and knitting mills.⁹ The manufacturing census for 1900, shows Nansemond County supported 115 establishments with a total capital of $555,071.¹⁰ The growth of the industries drew a large number of workers to Nansemond County and the town of Suffolk. In 1900, there was a total of 23,078 people in Nansemond County, an increase of 69% within twenty years.¹¹ According to a 1907 map of Suffolk, the town's population totaled 8,000 people.¹² With the large-scale growth of industry, the town of Suffolk was declared an incorporated city by the courts in 1910.¹³

One of the more well-known industries to develop in Suffolk after the Civil War was the peanut industry. Farmer's Alliance was the first peanut factory in Suffolk but it failed in 1893. The second factory, Suffolk Peanut Company, run by John King and John Pinner, was much more successful and lured other peanut investors to Suffolk. Between 1900 and 1939, numerous additional peanut processing and distributing firms appeared in Suffolk including The Columbian Peanut Company (1904), The Planter's Nut and Chocolate Company (1913) and Old Dominion Peanut Corporation (1933).¹⁴ By 1915 the peanut industry had surpassed the prosperous lumbering industry. A 1915 pamphlet claims the expected total lumber output would exceed two million dollars while the gross income of the eight peanut factories in Suffolk was expected to equal more than eight million dollars.¹⁵

Tied to the growth of Suffolk, significant changes occurred in West End. Between 1903 and 1908, the town limits of Suffolk were expanded to the south to include the area adjacent to the Norfolk & Western Railroad and to the west to include portions of the blocks on the west side of Causey Avenue and Pitchkettle Road. Suffolk also grew to the north of West Washington Street including Pitchkettle Road, Bute Street, First Street, Second Street and Third Street. This area to the north, supported by locally funded amenities, became a neighborhood of worker housing, many of which were square-shaped structures balanced by a few L-shaped dwellings. The majority of the buildings were wood-frame, one-story dwellings set close to the street. By 1908, a new grid street plan was laid out south of West Washington Street and west of Broad Street creating Causey Avenue, Bosley Avenue, Virginia Avenue, Maryland Avenue, and Gittings Street. The 1908 Sanborn Fire Insurance map shows West Washington Street to be the main residential corridor with the flanking blocks developing quickly.¹⁶

With a population of over 12,000 in 1914, Suffolk continued to expand in all directions around the city's center core, which was developing as a business district. The West End steadily was becoming a self-sufficient neighborhood with health, education, and religious institutions attending to the needs of its residents. Lakeview Hospital (demolished circa 1950) was constructed at the corner of Smith Street and Bosley Avenue to serve the growing community. Similarly, the Oxford Methodist Church was erected on Smith Avenue in 1908, and St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church improved the corner of Broad Street and Smith Street. The Randolph Public School was built between 1908 and 1914, at the corner of St. James Avenue and Smith Street.

Along with these public buildings, single-family dwellings continued to be built within West End between 1910 and 1926. Most of the dwellings dating to this period display vernacular interpretations of the Queen Anne, Colonial Revival and Craftsman styles and are located to the south of Smith Street with some in-fill housing north of Smith Street and on Brewer Avenue. These dwellings are smaller in scale and were constructed for foremen, shipping clerks, teachers, stenographers, bank tellers, and laborers. The effects of industry development is evident in the 1930 census as many of West End's dwellings were inhabited by employees of the peanut factories, lumber mills, and railroads. The owners, general managers, superintendents, agents, buyers, and chemists of the factories inhabited the older high-style dwellings located within a block or two of West

Washington Street, while the salesmen, stenographers, and clerks of the factories lived in the newer smaller dwellings south of Smith Street.¹⁷ Development did not extend south to the railroads. According to the 1920 and 1926 Sanborn Fire Insurance maps, there were companies located along the Norfolk and Western Railway, including a casket company, a hardware and lumber company, and a mattress company.¹⁸

Between 1926 and 1939, the need for modest, inexpensive housing prompted an increase in development to the west of Broad Street and extended the residential development of West End south to the Norfolk and Western Railway. All but the mattress company was demolished and between 1926 and 1939 single-family dwellings, and twin dwellings were erected south of Virginia Avenue. These rectangular wood-frame buildings are one to two stories in height and display elements of the Colonial Revival and Craftsman styles.

Development After 1939

By 1939, the development of the West End neighborhood was nearly complete. With the onset of World War II and the wartime economy, the City of Suffolk experienced another rise in population. As there were only a handful of unimproved lots within the West End neighborhood by 1940, new development occurred along and to the west of Causey Avenue. However, a handful of single-family dwelling and multiple dwellings were constructed on vacant lots after 1939. The few post-1939 multiple-family dwellings are two stories in height, have a rectangular massing and are constructed of brick. These buildings, reflecting the growing population during and immediately after the war, are located along the western boundaries of the district. The majority of single family dwellings constructed within the West End neighborhood after 1939 are one-story brick buildings with L-shaped footprints. These dwellings dating to the late 1950s, are distributed between the historic dwellings along Virginia and Linden Avenues. Commercial buildings and offices have more recently improved lots along the western blocks of West Washington Street and are the direct result of West Washington Street's status as a major transportation route to and from downtown Suffolk. These buildings serve the residents of West End as well as those living to the east in downtown Suffolk and those in the post-WWII developments to the west of West End.

Although the development of West End was completed by 1939, Suffolk has continued to grow throughout the 20th century and has become the Commonwealth of Virginia's largest city in geographic size, encompassing 430 square miles. With this growth, the population has climbed from 47,621 in 1980 to 67,195 in 2002.¹⁹ A portion of this growth can be attributed to the transportation systems that link Suffolk and the entire Hampton Roads region to the rest of the country and international ports by highway, air, rail, and shipping ports. The city has also become a prime location for large corporations, some of which have become major regional employers, including Planters' Peanuts, QVC, Inc., United States Joint Forces Command (USJFCOM), Lipton, Inc., Sara Lee Coffee and Tea Company, and the Birdsong Peanuts Corporation. In addition to its economic growth, the City of Suffolk brought in more than $32.7 million dollars in tourism in 2000, by attracting visitors to the area's historic, cultural and architectural resources.²⁰

Verbal Boundary Description

West End Historic District, located within the limits of the City of Suffolk, Virginia, is approximately four blocks west of the Suffolk Historic District. The Seaboard Coast Line Railroad creates the northernmost boundary of the West End Historic District and the Norfolk and Western Railroad defines the southern border. The eastern boundary of the district includes those properties on Pender Street and on the west side of Wellons Street, as well as properties fronting both the east and west sides of Linden Avenue. The western boundary, impacted the greatest by non-contributing and non-historic properties excluded from the historic district, includes resources fronting the east and west sides of Bosley Avenue, South Broad Street, and Brewer Avenue. A few properties on Causey Avenue, the westernmost border, are included in the district. The West End neighborhood occupies approximately 73 acres.

Boundary Justification

The boundaries of the West End Historic District were determined by 1) the boundaries of the Suffolk Local Historic Conservation Overlay District and 2) the survey work completed in 2001 and 2002 in this neighborhood of the City of Suffolk. The properties within the local historic overlay district were surveyed in 2001. The survey outside the local historic overlay district, assigned by the City of Suffolk Planning Department in 2002, included all properties within the area bounded by Smith Street to the north; the properties fronting both sides of Linden Avenue to the east; The Norfolk and Western Railroad to the south; and Causey Avenue to the west. The properties included the West End Historic District, as a result of both these survey phases, document the nineteenth-century development along West Washington Street and illustrate the expansion of the neighborhood to the north along Brewer Avenue and to the south along Wellons Street, Linden Avenue, and South Broad Street at the turn of the twentieth century. Further, it includes the last phase of sustained development between Smith Street and the Norfolk and Western Railroad during the first forty years of the twentieth century.
